PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SEVENTIETH CONGRESS FIRST SESSION

SENATE

MONDAY, December 5, 1927

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Seventieth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

CHARLES G. DAWES, of Illinois, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

Rev. Dr. ZeBarney Thorne Phillips, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, our Heavenly Father, the Maker and Ruler of all men, who hast made all things for man and man for Thy glory, we commend to Thy gracious keeping the people of these United States. Especially we pray Thy blessing upon the President of these United States, that in his life, his ideals, his wisdom, and discretion he may do only that which is well pleasing unto Thee.

Upon the Vice President, the Presiding Officer of this House, may the especial benediction of Thy grace and guidance of Thy spirit descend. Upon all in authority we invoke Thine especial blessing, especially upon this House, met in solemn assembly at this hour to rededicate anew unto Thee on the altar of their country all that they are and all that they have and all that they hope to be. Enlarge their vision, deepen their sense of righteousness, and may they see that in all they do they are acting in Thy stead and for the safety, honor, and welfare of this Thy people.

May the benediction of the spirit of him who has offered unto Thee the sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiving in this House descend upon us. Guide us, guard us, make us more meet and fit for service not only to our country but in the kingdom of God.

We ask it in the name and for the sake of Him who went about doing good and who taught us when we pray to say:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily break. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

The clerk will call the roll in blocks of four, and as their names are called the Senators elect will present themselves at the Vice President's desk to take the oath of office.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. BLACK, and Mr. BLAINE.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Mr. SHORTRIDGE and Mr. SMITH of Illinois.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of the highest senatorial privilege in regard to the taking of the oath of office by Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and I send to the Vice President's desk a privileged resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 1), as follows:

Whereas, on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election;

Whereas said committee in the discharge of its duties notified FRANK L. SMITH of Illinois, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceeding, and the said FRANK L. SMITH appeared in person and was permitted to counsel with and be represented by his attorneys and agents;

Whereas the said committee has reported—

That the evidence without substantial dispute shows that there was expended directly or indirectly for and on behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH for the United States Senate the sum of $458,782; that all of the above sums except $171,500 was contributed directly to and received by the personal agent and representative of the said FRANK L. SMITH with his full knowledge and consent, and that of the total sum aforesaid there was contributed by officers of large public-service institutions doing business in the State of Illinois or by said institutions the sum of $203,000, a substantial part of which sum was contributed by men who were nonresidents of Illinois but who were officers of Illinois public-service corporations;

That at all of the times aforesaid the said FRANK L. SMITH was chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission, and that said public-service corporations commonly and generally had business before said commission, and said commission was, among other things, empowered to regulate the rates, charges, and business of said corporations;

That by the statutes of Illinois it is made a misdemeanor for any officer or agent of such public-service corporations to contribute any money to any member of said commission or for any member of said commission to accept such moneys upon penalty of removal from office;

That said SMITH has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity was given to him not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence is now and for many months has been on file with the Senate, and all of the said facts appears without substantial dispute: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the acceptance and expenditure of the various sums of money aforesaid in behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of free government, and taints with fraud and corruption the credentials for a seat in the Senate presented by the said FRANK L. SMITH; and be it further

Resolved, That the said FRANK L. SMITH is not entitled to take the oath of office and is not entitled to membership in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator elect from Illinois may stand aside until the oath shall have been administered to those against whom there are no objections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie over and the Senator elect from Illinois will stand aside.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Mr. SHORTRIDGE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. STEIWER.

These Senators escorted, respectively, by Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. BLEASE, Mr. KING, and Mr. MCNARY, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath of office was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Mr. THOMAS, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. VARE.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, again I rise to a question of senatorial privilege in regard to the swearing in of Mr. VARE, and send to the clerk's desk a privileged resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 2), as follows:

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate, and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election; and

Whereas said committee, in the discharge of its duties, notified WILLIAM S. VARE, of Pennsylvania, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceedings, and the said WILLIAM S. VARE appeared in person and by attorney before said committee while it was engaged in making such investigation; and

Whereas the said committee has reported that the evidence without substantial dispute shows that at the primary election at which the said WILLIAM S. VARE is alleged to have been nominated as a candidate for the United States Senate there were numerous and various instances of fraud and corruption in behalf of the candidacy of the said WILLIAM S. VARE, and that there was spent in behalf of the said WILLIAM S. VARE in said primary election, by the said WILLIAM S. VARE and his friends, a sum of money exceeding $785,000; and

Whereas the said WILLIAM S. VARE has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity was given him not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence taken by said committee is now and for many months has been on file in the Senate, and all of the said facts appear without substantial dispute; and

Whereas on the 10th day of January, 1927, there was filed in the Senate an official communication from the then Governor of Pennsylvania, made and delivered to the Senate in pursuance of law, the following certificate:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Harrisburg, January 8, 1927.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the returns of the election of United States Senator, held on November 2, 1926, as the law of this Commonwealth directs.

I have the honor also to inform you that I have to-day signed and by registered mail delivered to Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, a certificate which is as follows:

"TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

"This is to certify that on the face of the returns filed in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth of the election held on the 2d day of November, 1926, WILLIAM S. VARE appears to have been chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Pennsylvania a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1927."

The form of words customarily used for such certificates by the governors of this Commonwealth and the form recommended by the Senate of the United States both include certification that the candidate in question has been "duly chosen by the qualified electors" of the Commonwealth.

I can not so certify, because I do not believe that Mr. VARE has been duly chosen. On the contrary, I am convinced, and have repeatedly declared, that his nomination was partly bought and partly stolen, and that frauds committed in his interest have tainted both the primary and the general election. But even if there had been no fraud in the election, a man who was not honestly nominated can not be honestly entitled to a seat.

The stealing of votes for Mr. VARE and the amount and the sources of the money spent in his behalf make it clear to me that the election returns do not in fact correctly represent the will of the sovereign voters of Pennsylvania.

Therefore I have so worded the certificate required by law that I can sign it without distorting the truth.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Very respectfully yours,

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the expenditure of such a large sum of money to secure the nomination of the said WILLIAM S. VARE as a candidate for the United States Senate is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government, and, together with the charges of corruption and fraud made in the report of said committee and substantiated by the evidence taken by said committee, and the charges of corruption and fraud officially made by the Governor of Pennsylvania, taints with fraud and corruption the credentials of the said WILLIAM S. VARE for a seat in the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That the said WILLIAM S. VARE is not entitled to take the oath of office and is not entitled to membership in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the Senator elect from Pennsylvania may stand aside until the oath shall have been administered to the Senators elect against whom there are no objections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie over, and the Senator elect from Pennsylvania will stand aside.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Mr. THOMAS, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. WATERMAN, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. WILLIS.

These Senators, escorted, respectively, by Mr. PINE, Mr. BRUCE, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, and Mr. FESS, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath of office was administered to them.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, December 5, 1927

This day, in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, the Members elect of the House of Representatives of the Seventieth Congress assembled in their hall and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by William Tyler Page, Clerk of the last House.

The CLERK. The Chaplain of the last House will lead in prayer.

The Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the last House, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, in whose presence there is fullness of joy and at Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore, we humbly acknowledge Thee to be the only true God. Our praise and gratitude rise to Thee and our restraining meekness would say: "Glory be to Thee, O Lord, most high, Thy will be done." In the light of Thy love the valleys of our experience have been exalted and the deep things have been illuminated. At the very front door of this Congress may we realize the sancity of our commission and know that the measure of our power shall be the measure of our virile, manly virtues. O Holy Spirit shine upon our weakness and press upon our deepest beings; diffuse them through and through with a consuming energy and devotion for our whole beloved land. We pause again and in this solemn stillness breathe an earnest prayer for our Speaker, the Members and officers of this Chamber. Do Thou inspire us with the might of Thy wisdom, the majesty of Thy sacrifices, and the glory of Thy shame. May we not be forced in our labors by the cold motive of duty, but by the urgency of love—love of God, love for the Republic, and an appreciation for all humanity. At the last may we hear the music break on the eternal shores. Amen.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—5

Berger	Garrett, Tenn.	Kvale	Longworth
Carss

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tally. The total number of votes cast is 417, of which Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH has received 225 and Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT has received 187; answering "present," 5. Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, a Representative elect from the State of Ohio, having received a majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Seventieth Congress. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. TILSON; the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN; the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER; the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT; and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GARNER, will please escort the Speaker elect to the chair, and the Clerk designates the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BUTLER, the Member longest in continuous service in the House, to administer to the Speaker elect the oath of office prescribed by law.

The committee appointed by the Clerk escorted Mr. LONGWORTH to the Speaker's chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My colleagues of the House of Representatives, it is again my privilege formally to present the Speaker elect of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

This I do gladly because of personal friendship and with pleasure because in the school of experience we have learned that the predictions of two years agone have been vindicated and verified. His ability, firmness, and fairness were demonstrated during the Sixty-ninth Congress. [Applause.] His proven fitness for this distinguished honor—one of the greatest that can come to man—gives us entire confidence in the rectitude of his parliamentary convictions, and makes us rest secure in the assurance that as we labor here together we shall have in this great place one thoroughly equipped by intellect, by character, and by training for the high and arduous labors which he has been chosen to perform.

My colleagues, the Speaker that has been and the Speaker that is to be, Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, of Ohio. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER elect. Gentlewomen and gentlemen of the House of Representatives of the Seventieth Congress, for the second time by your voices I have been chosen to be your presiding officer.

The Speakership of the House of Representatives is one of the great governmental offices of the world. It is, I think, generally agreed that it is second in dignity and importance, together with power and influence upon the future of America, potential at least, only to the Presidency itself.

My study of history and my experience of two years in this office have convinced me, however, that no man, no matter of how great ability, can be a successful Speaker unless he gains and retains during his term the respect and confidence of his colleagues. That I have been in a measure successful, as your reception would seem to indicate, is due in major part to the fact that I have succeeded in these two respects.

To you of my party, to-day the great majority party of the United States, who have with unanimity cast your votes for my reelection to this high office, I tender my most profound and heartfelt thanks, not so much for the office itself as for the evidence of your conception of my worthiness to fill it.

I am particularly pleased to have received the votes of gentlemen who have been seated on my party's side of the aisle for the past four years, but who on two previous occasions have preferred to vote for a candidate for Speaker other than the one proposed by the Republican majority. I welcome your return to the Republican Party, where you rightfully belong. [Applause on the Republican side.] I like to row in the same boat with that fine old veteran of a hundred political battles, HENRY ALLEN COOPER, and with NELSON and FREAR and all of you. [Applause.]

To you seated upon the present minority side of the aisle, who cast your votes, as you were in honor bound to do, for your chosen leader, I am no less indebted, because of the expression of esteem and confidence you gave me at the close of the session of the last Congress, and have repeated this morning.

If there is one cloud upon my happiness to-day it is the thought that from the next Congress, of which I hope and expect to be a Member, the leader of the minority, on his own motion and by his own will, will be absent. During the more than 25 years that I have held public office I have known, often intimately, all of the outstanding public men of the period, but among them all I have never known a finer character than FINIS GARRETT—student, scholar, debater of the first order, orator, a master unexcelled in the use of the English language, patriot, a gentleman in all that fine old English word implies—he possesses all the qualities that make for my ideal of what an American statesman ought to be. [Applause, the Members rising.]

We are entering upon a session during which grave problems will confront us. I hope most sincerely that we may be able to meet and solve them with as little bitterness and partisanship as possible. I hope that while we may be widely divided in our opinions upon what is best for the country, our differences may always be based upon fundamental economic principles and never upon questions of geography, race, or, above all, of religion. [Applause.] Thus we shall continue upon the path laid out by the fathers of the Constitution, which has brought us to a condition of happiness, prosperity, and world influence undreamt of by them, and in the future, as generations succeed each other, will lead us onward and upward to heights that no other country has ever attained or ever will attain.

But whatever may eventuate of this, be well assured that, so far as it lies in the power of the Speaker, the honor and dignity of this House will be at all times upheld, and the rights of the minority and of each individual Member of full and free debate and of making record upon all important questions will be fully protected. [Applause.]

And now one word before I take the solemn oath of office. In the circumstances and conditions with which I find myself surrounded, possessing, as I believe I do, the esteem and good will of all my colleagues in the proportion which I similarly entertain for each one of them, I say, and I say it with the utmost sincerity, that I had rather be Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States than hold any other office in the gift of the American people. Need I say more to evidence my happiness at again being called upon to serve you?

I am prepared to take the oath.

Mr. BUTLER administered the oath of office to the Speaker.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER administered the oath of office to the Members and Delegates, the Members and Delegates presenting themselves as their names were called by States and Territories, in the area in front of the Speaker's desk, taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. GRIEST qualified by affirmation.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT JAMES M. BECK

While the Speaker was administering the oath of office to the various Members and Delegates, when the State of Pennsylvania was called, the following occurred:

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object to the oath at this time being administered to Mr. JAMES M. BECK, a Representative elect from the State of Pennsylvania, upon the ground that there is a question as to his eligibility under the Constitution of the United States, there being a question as to whether he was an inhabitant of the State of Pennsylvania at the time of his election, as is required by the Constitution. Later I shall present a resolution upon the subject.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we do not object to Mr. BECK temporarily standing aside, but it is definitely understood that it in no way prejudices his position before this House. We maintain that no Member, not even the Speaker himself, has the power to deny the right to take the oath of office to a man who presents his credentials from the State from which he comes. With that understanding we are perfectly willing that he shall temporarily step aside.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] to temporarily step aside.

Mr. BECK stepped aside, and the oath of office was administered to the other Members elect from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I request the oath be now administered to the Representative from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object, and offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is charged that JAMES M. BECK, a Representative elect to the Seventieth Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, is ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives for the reason that he was not at the time of his election an inhabitant of the State of Pennsylvania in the sense of the provision of the Constitution of the United States (par. 5 of sec. 2, Art. I) prescribing the qualifications for Members thereof; and whereas such charge is made through a Member of the House and on his responsibility as such Member, upon the basis, as he asserts, of records and papers evidencing such ineligibility:

Resolved, That the question of the prima facie right of JAMES M. BECK to be sworn in as a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania of the Seventieth Congress, as well as of his final right to a seat therein as such Representative, be referred to Committee on Elections

No. 2; and until such committee shall report upon and the House decide such question and right, the said JAMES M. BECK shall not be sworn in nor be entitled to the privileges of the floor; and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath relative to the subject matter of this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the information which has come to me that led to this resolution is, of course, a matter that will require proof. The statement briefly is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was for long an inhabitant of New York, of New Jersey, and of the District of Columbia, having no residence of any kind or character in the State of Pennsylvania. That on the 6th of September last, or about that time, the gentleman registered in the city of Philadelphia; and that he at about that time caused himself to be assessed for some kind of taxes, he not having theretofore paid any taxes at that point; and at some time, the time being wholly indefinite, a lease was taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania upon an apartment in the city of Philadelphia, which apartment has been but seldom, if ever, occupied by him; that it is not in fact the place of his domicile or his residence; that he has not been and was not at the time of his election in November an inhabitant in a constitutional sense of the State from which elected. That is a matter which requires investigation by a committee in order that the privileges of the House as well as the rights of the district and the individual may be properly protected. I therefore, Mr. Speaker, move the previous question upon the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Before the gentleman moves the previous question will he yield——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to debate this question at this time, because I fully appreciate that the real facts in the investigation must come before an Elections Committee, which is the proper procedure in the House. I simply desire at this time to say that there is no Elections Committee No. 2, and it would be better if his resolution were referred to one of the Elections Committees, and I also desire to ask the gentleman if he will not permit me to offer this substitute for his resolution, not that I want debate, but in order that vote may come upon a direct affirmative proposition. My resolution is simply that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] be now permitted to take the oath of office.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say I do not think I should yield to the gentleman to offer that substitute, because we can vote upon this resolution which I have offered without there being the necessity of even a preliminary investigation. The question of whether the gentleman is entitled to his seat, as the substitute implies, is a matter of doubt raised by the Constitution itself and can only be properly determined by an investigation, and therefore I can not yield for that purpose.

Now, just a word about the committee to which the gentleman from New York referred. I looked over the personnel of the Committees on Elections, assuming that they would be substantially as they have been, and the reason I selected Committee No. 2 was because there was no member upon that committee from the State of Pennsylvania. Rare, indeed, it is when you find any committee of importance in this House upon which there is not from one to three gentlemen from Pennsylvania as members. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a short statement of about two minutes?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with the same question that has arisen two or three times during my membership of the House. Some Member has arisen and questioned the right of another Member to take the oath of office. I maintain that in this preliminary stage of the proceedings that no man has that right. Every one of us with accredited credentials from the several States started on the same footing as far as the right to take the oath of office is concerned. Now let us see just what the actual facts are.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has presented uncontested credentials from the sovereign State of Pennsylvania, and no man denies that. That is all any Member has at the present time, and is all the Constitution requires up to this stage of the proceedings. If we had the time, I would like to have them read and placed in evidence before the House. I deny that any Member, or even the Speaker himself, has the power during the preliminary organization of this House, by a resolution such as the gentleman from Tennessee has read to us, to prevent any man from taking this oath. [Applause.] What few precedents I have been able to examine in the short time allowed since this matter has been called to my attention lead me to think that there has been no direct precedent up to this time for refusing the right to take the oath, and I see no reason why any Member of this House should desire to deprive the gentleman from Pennsylvania from exercising his accredited right, and I trust the motion for the previous question will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield for a brief statement.

Mr. BERGER. I would like to state that eight or nine years ago I presented a certificate of election duly signed by the secretary of state of Wisconsin, but I was not permitted to take my oath. This has happened to me twice. [Laughter.] I wish to add just one more word. This evidently is one of the chickens that has come home to roost. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. The vote on the Republican side is against the previous question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is very fortunate for gentlemen on that side that the gentleman from New York is there to inform them. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to order the previous question on the resolution presented by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of ordering the previous question on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 245, answered "present" 1, not voting 29, as follows:

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. LETTS, of the second district of the State of Iowa, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT JAMES M. BECK

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and move the previous question on the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BECK, be now permitted to take the oath of office.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the resolution as amended by the substitute.

The resolution was agreed to.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Hall when the oath was administered to Representatives elect from the State of Illinois, and I would like to take the oath now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will administer the oath now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BECK, of the first district of the State of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BRITTEN, of the ninth district of the State of Illinois, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT JAMES M. BECK

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 1

Resolved, That the right of JAMES M. BECK to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Seventieth Congress be referred to the Committee on Elections No. 2, which committee shall report thereon so soon as practicable, and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath relative to the subject matter of this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there are some whereases in the resolution that I do not care to have reported in connection with it because they are precisely the same as the whereases contained in the other resolution, but they should be printed in connection with the resolution.

The SPEAKER. They will be ordered printed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a question of order should be interposed. Is this matter in order until the rules are adopted? There are no rules existing for the appointment of committees, therefore it seems to me that a question of order ought to be raised now rather than allow the matter to go by default and thereby establish a precedent.

I wish to say that I have no objection to a resolution providing for an investigation of any facts in connection with the right of this Member to retain his seat.

Mr. SNELL. And I suggest that the gentleman withhold his resolution and offer it later in the day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is immaterial to me when the matter is presented. Of course, in fact, there will be no committees to-day, but I do want to present the resolution.

Mr. TILSON. The rules will be adopted soon I hope, and then the gentleman can have a reference of his resolution to the proper committee when raised.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I may say again that the Committee on Elections No. 2 was selected simply because, upon glancing at the directory, I found there was no one from Pennsylvania a member of that committee in the past Congress.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will yield, I will state that there are in contemplation some changes in the committees of the House. This may possibly be one of those committees, though I do not think it will be. However, that is possible, so I suggest to the gentleman that he withhold his resolution until the rules are adopted and there is such a committee. Then it will be in order to consider his resolution.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut is it not going to be possible to find one major committee of this House on which a Pennsylvanian will not have to go? [Laughter.]

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman will have to consult the list of committees when they are appointed.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman from Connecticut agree that as soon as the rule is adopted, the gentleman from Tennessee can be recognized and that the resolution may then be acted upon?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly; I agree to that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] withdraw the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withhold the resolution.

29. Renumber clauses in Rules X and XI.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the first part of the resolution that was read at the desk needs no explanation at this time. It simply adopts the rules as they existed at the close of the Sixty-ninth Congress.

For several years there has been a good deal of discussion among Members about abolishing certain committees that have no real work to do in the House. During the latter part of the last session the Rules Committee considered this proposition for a considerable time, but we were unable at that time to make a definite arrangement or agreement. I will appreciate the fact that you can not do anything as radical as abolishing certain standing committees of the House, changing others, and creating new ones without practically a unanimous agreement. And in this case we have that, or at least as far as the Rules Committee is concerned. I think there is no one on either side but that will agree that it is foolish and ridiculous for us to carry from year to year 16 committees that have practically no work to do in connection with the work of the House and are only deadwood, used simply to furnish assignments to Members. The majority of the committees that we are abolishing have not met in several years and there is no probability that there will be any work for them in the immediate future.

Now, if I may have your attention, I will explain in detail what we are proposing to do at this time. We are abolishing the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic Committee, the Committee on Railways and Canals, the Committee on Woman Suffrage, the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, and 11 expenditure committees and the Mileage Committee. We are creating in place of the 11 expenditure committees one expenditure committee of 21 members that will have jurisdiction of expenditures for all executive departments and do all the work the whole 11 could have done. This committee will be provided with a room, a clerk, and everything that is necessary to do certain work that is desired to be done in connection with the work of the Appropriations Committee, and also along other various lines.

It is also proposed to change the work done by the Mileage Committee to the Committee on Accounts. That committee has all of the equipment, clerks, and so forth, to do it without added expense.

Now we propose to increase the membership of the Interstate Commerce Committee from 21 to 23 members; the membership of the Judiciary Committee from 21 members to 23 members; the Committee on Civil Service from 13 members to 21 members; the Committee on Claims from 15 members to 21 members; the Committee on Flood Control from 15 members to 21 members; the Committee on Invalid Pensions from 15 members to 21 members; the Committee on Pensions from 15 members to 21 members; the Committee on War Claims from 15 members to 21 members; the Committee on Patents from 17 members to 21 members; the Committee on Labor from 15 members to 21 members; Immigration Committee from 17 members to 21 members; Committee on Education from 15 members to 21 members; Census Committee 15 members to 21 members; Committee on Territories from 15 members to 21 members.

As a general summing up of what we have done in regard to the total number of committee assignments in the House, we have eliminated 129 assignments, but of those 129 assignments there were 17 in the last Congress that never were filled, so that we are really eliminating only 112, and in lieu of those that we have eliminated we are creating 86 definite committee assignments—assignments on active working committees of the House. Therefore every Member who receives assignment under the present plan will be assigned to a committee that has something to do with the everyday work and progress of the House. Further, of the Members who are affected by this elimination of assignments 54 had over four or more committee assignments and there were 79 Members in the last Congress who had over four assignments.

Considerable thought and attention have been given to this, and we believe that these recommendations will tend toward more efficient work in the House, and certainly the new Members should be very much interested in this change, because it assures every one of them being appointed on some committee that has real, definite work to do.

I would be very glad to answer any questions that anyone cares to ask.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Do the Committees on Expenditures referred to by the gentleman cover the independent offices expenditure committee?

Mr. SNELL. It is intended to cover all of them.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. I am quite in sympathy with the effort to reduce the number of committees and to eliminate some that are useless, but one or two of those committees have some functions and are called upon occasionally to meet and take some action with reference to some bills introduced into the House. What will be the procedure with reference to the change of jurisdiction of these committees? Where will the jurisdiction be transferred?

Mr. SNELL. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Mileage is transferred to the Committee on Accounts. At the present time there is nothing definite in mind beyond what has already been taken care of.

Mr. LANHAM. I call to mind one committee which has had occasional meetings and which has had some business before it in the last few sessions of Congress. I refer to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions. While it is not anticipated that anything will arise with reference to that particular committee in the near future, yet something may. Should not the jurisdiction of that committee be transferred to the jurisdiction of some other committee of the House?

Mr. SNELL. That question has been discussed somewhat, and if in the future we find that there is need to transfer its jurisdiction to some other committee, that will be done.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. How have the committee assignments been divided with respect to the majority and minority committees—the 23 and the 21 Members?

Mr. SNELL. I suppose exactly the same as they always have been divided. The Committee on Rules has nothing to do with that; that is a matter for the Committee on Committees.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has the committee given any attention to the consolidation of the Election Committees?

Mr. SNELL. Our original program was to consolidate them; but the one remaining chairman—that is, the chairman of Elections No. 1, that was not to be abolished—made such a good case for retaining all of them for them that we finally decided it was better to keep the whole three.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, if any such question arises as that suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], the Speaker will always refer the bills to the committee which he believes has jurisdiction of the subject matter of the bills. The Speaker can determine the question when the question is presented.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the reason for abolishing the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, of which I had the honor to be a member, based on the fact that the Committee on Rules is convinced that there is no more traffic in liquor?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know that we looked for any reason for abolishing it, for everyone knows it has nothing to do now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in the Sixty-ninth Congress the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] introduced a rule to abolish the 11 committees on expenditures. That rule was pending before the Committee on Rules for two years. I congratulate the Committee on Rules and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] on finally adopting the suggestions made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] to abolish these 11 useless committees.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If I understood the gentleman correctly this committee has increased only two committees from 21 members—the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is there any specific reason why that was done?

Mr. SNELL. It is hard for me to give a specific reason, but I might say that we did it primarily because we were requested by our friends on the Democratic side of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York permit me to offer an amendment to his resolution?

Mr. SNELL. I do not believe that I could open this to amendment at the present time. If I did, there would be several others who would desire to offer amendments.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to state what I wish to propose?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is to strike out the words "Sixty-ninth," where they appear before the word "Congress," and insert the words "Sixty-eighth." Those rules were very highly complimented by the distinguished Speaker at the conclusion of that session.

Mr. SNELL. He is not entirely responsible for the rules, as you know. Mr. Speaker, this has been unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Rules; also the Committee on Accounts have done a great amount of work on this subject and are earnestly in favor of its adoption.

I am sure the whole proposition is in the interest of better efficiency in the House and will meet the whole-hearted approval of the American people.

I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE HON. GORDON LEE

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, with genuine sorrow I announce to the House that on November 7 Hon. Gordon Lee, who for 22 years honored Georgia as a Member of this House, passed away at his home in Chickamauga, Ga.

Mr. Lee was one of nature's noblemen, and he loved his fellow man and in return was loved by all who knew him. For the last two years of his life he was practically bedridden; therefore he was not a candidate for reelection to the Seventieth Congress. During his long illness he was bright and cheerful and displayed his usual good fellowship, and was an inspiration to those friends who had the privilege of seeing him.

The citizens of the seventh congressional district always desired to honor him for they knew his worth and character, and they never withheld from him any honor he sought. During his life he served his people lovingly and faithfully, and like Cæsar of old his love for them was such that he remembered them in his will. It will undoubtedly interest you, his colleagues who knew and loved him, to know that Mr. Lee left practically his entire fortune of over a million dollars for the founding of a high school in Chickamauga, Ga., for the education of mountain boys and girls. Under the provisions of the will a trust fund was created for the purpose of lending money to them to enable them to obtain an education to equip themselves for citizenship. Thus, while his physical day of earthly usefulness is ended, his loving act will for many years to come go on. Verily, "The good men do lives after them."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. LEATHERWOOD, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. COLTON), was granted leave of absence for five days on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect for our late deceased colleagues, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 6, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, December 6, 1927

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who in the former time didst lead our fathers forth into a wealthy place, give Thy grace, we humbly beseech Thee, to us their children, that we may always approve ourselves a people mindful of Thy favor and glad to do Thy will. Bless our land, defend our liberties, preserve our unity. Save us from violence, discord, and confusion, from pride and arrogance, and from every evil way. Endue with the spirit of wisdom those with whom we intrust in Thy name the authority of governance. In our prosperity fill our hearts with thankfulness, and in the day of trouble suffer not our trust in Thee to fail; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a resolution (H. Res. 3) informing the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives had assembled; that NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, a Representative from the State of Ohio, had been elected Speaker; that William Tyler Page, a citizen of the State of Maryland, had been elected Clerk; and that the House was ready to proceed to business.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution (H. Res. 4) providing for the appointment of three Members on the part of the House to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The message communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, late a Representative from the State of New York, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. LADISLAS LAZARO, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. M. E. CRUMPACKER, late a Representative from the State of Oregon, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WILLIAM N. VAILE, late a Representative from the State of Colorado, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas advanced in the center aisle and

Mr. CURTIS said: Mr. President, the committee of the Senate, appointed to join a similar committee of the House to wait upon the President and advise him that a majority of the two bodies had assembled and are ready to receive any communication he may have to make, performed its duty as directed, and begs to report that the President stated he would immediately communicate with the Congress by a message in writing.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE

Mr. Latta, one of the secretaries of the President, was announced and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received by the Assistant Doorkeeper [C. A. Loeffler] and handed to the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the message, as follows:

MEMBERS OF THE CONGRESS: It is gratifying to report that for the fourth consecutive year the state of the Union in general is good. We are at peace. The country as a whole has had a prosperity never exceeded. Wages are at their highest range, employment is plentiful. Some parts of agriculture and industry have lagged; some localities have suffered from storm and flood. But such losses have been absorbed without serious detriment to our great economic structure. Stocks of goods are moderate and a wholesome caution is prevalent. Rates of interest for industry, agriculture, and government have been reduced. Savers and investors are providing capital for new construction in industry and public works. The purchasing power of agriculture has increased. If the people maintain that confidence which they are entitled to have in themselves, in each other, and in America, a comfortable prosperity will continue.

CONSTRUCTIVE ECONOMY

Without constructive economy in Government expenditures we should not now be enjoying these results or these prospects. Because we are not now physically at war, some people are disposed to forget that our war debt still remains. The Nation must make financial sacrifices, accompanied by a stern self-denial in public expenditures, until we have conquered the disabilities of our public finance. While our obligation to veterans and dependents is large and continuing, the heavier burden of the national debt is being steadily eliminated. At the end of this fiscal year it will be reduced from about $26,600,000,000 to about $17,975,000,000. Annual interest, including war savings, will have been reduced from $1,055,000,000 to $670,000,000. The sacrifices of the people, the economy of the Government, are showing remarkable results. They should be continued for the purpose of relieving the Nation of the burden of interest and debt and releasing revenue for internal improvements and national development.

Not only the amount but the rate of Government interest has been reduced. Callable bonds have been refunded and paid, so that during this year the average rate of interest on the present public debt for the first time fell below 4 per cent. Keeping the credit of the Nation high is a tremendously profitable operation.

TAX REDUCTION

The immediate fruit of economy and the retirement of the public debt is tax reduction. The annual saving in interest between 1925 and 1929 is $212,000,000. Without this no bill to relieve the taxpayers would be worth proposing. The three measures already enacted leave our Government revenues where they are not oppressive. Exemptions have been increased until 115,000,000 people make but 2,500,000 individual taxable returns, so that further reduction should be mainly for the purpose of removing inequalities. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended a measure which would give us a much better balanced system of taxation and without oppression produce sufficient revenue. It has my complete support.

Unforeseen contingencies requiring money are always arising. Our probable surplus for June 30, 1929, is small. A slight depression in business would greatly reduce our revenue because of our present method of taxation. The people ought to take no selfish attitude of pressing for removing moderate and fair taxes which might produce a deficit. We must keep our budget balanced for each year. That is the corner stone of our national credit, the trifling price we pay to command the lowest rate of interest of any great power in the world. Any surplus can be applied to debt reduction, and debt reduction is tax reduction. Under the present circumstances it would be far better to leave the rates as they are than to enact a bill carrying the peril of a deficit. This is not a problem to be approached in a narrow or partisan spirit. All of those who participate in finding a reasonable solution will be entitled to participate in any credit that accrues from it without regard to party. The Congress has already demonstrated that tax legislation can be removed from purely political consideration into the realm of patriotic business principles.

Any bill for tax reduction should be written by those who are responsible for raising, managing, and expending the finances of the Government. If special interests, too often selfish, always uninformed of the national needs as a whole, with hired agents using their proposed beneficiaries as engines of propaganda, are permitted to influence the withdrawal of their property from taxation, we shall have a law that is unbalanced and unjust, bad for business, bad for the country, probably resulting in a deficit, with disastrous financial consequences. The Constitution has given the Members of the Congress sole authority to decide what tax measures shall be presented for approval. While welcoming information from any quarter, the Congress should continue to exercise its own judgment in a matter so vital and important to all the interests of the country as taxation.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Being a nation relying not on force, but on fair dealing and good will, to maintain peace with others, we have provided a moderate military force in a form adapted solely to defense. It should be continued with a very generous supply of officers and with the present base of personnel, subject to fluctuations which may be temporarily desirable.

The five-year program for our air forces is in keeping with this same policy and commensurate with the notable contributions of America to the science of aeronautics. The provisions of the law lately enacted are being executed as fast as the practical difficulties of an orderly and stable development permit.

While our Army is small, prudence requires that it should be kept in a high state of efficiency and provided with such supplies as would permit of its immediate expansion. The garrison ration has lately been increased. Recommendations for an appropriation of $6,166,000 for new housing made to the previous Congress failed to pass. While most of the Army is well housed, some of it which is quartered in war-time training camps is becoming poorly housed. In the past three years $12,533,000 have been appropriated for reconstruction and repairs, and an authorization has been approved of $22,301,000 for new housing, under which $8,070,000 has already been appropriated. A law has also been passed, complying with the request of the War Department, allocating funds received from the sale of buildings and land for housing purposes. The work, however, is not completed, so that other appropriations are being recommended.

Our Navy is likewise a weapon of defense. We have a foreign commerce and ocean lines of trade unsurpassed by any other country. We have outlying territory in the two great oceans and long stretches of seacoast studded with the richest cities in the world. We are responsible for the protection of a large population and the greatest treasure ever bestowed upon any people. We are charged with an international duty of defending the Panama Canal. To meet these responsibilities we need a very substantial sea armament. It needs aircraft development, which is being provided under the five-year program. It needs submarines as soon as the department decides upon the best type of construction. It needs airplane carriers and a material addition to its force of cruisers. We can plan for the future and begin a moderate building program.

This country has put away the Old World policy of competitive armaments. It can never be relieved of the responsibility of adequate national defense. We have one treaty secured by an unprecedented attitude of generosity on our part for a limitation in naval armament. After most careful preparation, extending over months, we recently made every effort to secure a three-power treaty to the same end. We were granted much cooperation by Japan, but we were unable to come to an agreement with Great Britain. While the results of the conference were of considerable value, they were mostly of a negative character. We know now that no agreement can be reached which will be inconsistent with a considerable building program on our part. We are ready and willing to continue the preparatory investigations on the general subject of limitation of armaments which have been started under the auspices of the League of Nations.

We have a considerable cruiser tonnage, but a part of it is obsolete. Everyone knew that had a three-power agreement been reached it would have left us with the necessity of continuing our building program. The failure to agree should not cause us to build either more or less than we otherwise should. Any future treaty of limitation will call on us for more ships. We should enter on no competition. We should refrain from no needful program. It should be made clear to all the world that lacking a definite agreement, the attitude of any other country is not to be permitted to alter our own policy. It should especially be demonstrated that propaganda will not cause us to change our course. Where there is no treaty limitation, the size of the Navy which America is to have will be solely for America to determine. No outside influence should enlarge it or diminish it. But it should be known to all that our military power holds no threat of aggrandizement. It is a guaranty of peace and security at home, and when it goes abroad it is an instrument for the protection of the legal rights of our citizens under international law, a refuge in time of disorder, and always the servant of world peace. Wherever our flag goes the rights of humanity increase.

MERCHANT MARINE

The United States Government fleet is transporting a large amount of freight and reducing its drain on the Treasury. The Shipping Board is constantly under pressure, to which it too often yields, to protect private interests, rather than serve the public welfare. More attention should be given to merchant ships as an auxiliary of the Navy. The possibility of including their masters and crews in the Naval Reserve, with some reasonable compensation, should be thoroughly explored as a method of encouraging private operation of shipping. Public operation is not a success. No investigation, of which I have caused several to be made, has failed to report that it could not succeed or to recommend speedy transfer to private ownership. Our exporters and importers are both indifferent about using American ships. It should be our policy to keep our present vessels in repair and dispose of them as rapidly as possible, rather than undertake any new construction. Their operation is a burden on the National Treasury, for which we are not receiving sufficient benefits.

COMMERCIAL AVIATION

A rapid growth is taking place in aeronautics. The Department of Commerce has charge of the inspection and licensing system and the construction of national airways. Almost 8,000 miles are already completed and about 4,000 miles more contemplated. Nearly 4,400 miles are now equipped and over 3,000 miles more will have lighting and emergency landing fields by next July. Air mail contracts are expected to cover 24 of these lines. Daily airway flying is nearly 15,000 miles and is expected to reach 25,000 miles early next year.

Flights for other purposes exceed 22,000 miles each day. Over 900 airports, completed and uncompleted, have been laid out. The demand for aircraft has greatly increased. The policy already adopted by the Congress is producing the sound development of this coming industry.

WESTERN HEMISPHERE AIR MAIL

Private enterprise is showing much interest in opening up aviation service to Mexico and Central and South America. We are particularly solicitous to have the United States take a leading part in this development. It is understood that the governments of our sister countries would be willing to cooperate. Their physical features, the undeveloped state of their transportation, make an air service especially adaptable to their usage. The Post Office Department should be granted power to make liberal long-term contracts for carrying our mail, and authority should be given to the Army and the Navy to detail aviators and planes to cooperate with private enterprise in establishing such mail service with the consent of the countries concerned. A committee of the Cabinet will later present a report on this subject.

GOOD ROADS

The importance and benefit of good roads is more and more coming to be appreciated. The National Government has been making liberal contributions to encourage their construction.

The results and benefits have been very gratifying. National participation, however, should be confined to trunk-line systems. The national tax on automobiles is now nearly sufficient to meet this outlay. This tax is very small, and on low-priced cars is not more than $2 or $3 each year.

While the advantage of having good roads is very large, the desire for improved highways is not limited to our own country. It should and does include all the Western Hemisphere. The principal points in Canada are already accessible. We ought to lend our encouragement in any way we can for more good roads to all the principal points in this hemisphere south of the Rio Grande. It has been our practice to supply these countries with military and naval advisers, when they have requested it, to assist them in national defense. The arts of peace are even more important to them and to us. Authority should be given by law to provide them at their request with engineering advisers for the construction of roads and bridges. In some of these countries already wonderful progress is being made in road building, but the engineering features are often very exacting and the financing difficult. Private interests should look with favor on all reasonable loans sought by these countries to open such main lines of travel.

This general subject has been promoted by the Pan American Congress of Highways, which will convene again at Rio de Janeiro in July, 1928. It is desirable that the Congress should provide for the appointment of delegates to represent the Government of the United States.

CUBAN PARCEL POST

We have a temporary parcel-post convention with Cuba. The advantage of it is all on our side. During 1926 we shipped twelve times as many parcels, weighing twenty-four times as much, as we received. This convention was made on the understanding that we would repeal an old law prohibiting the importation of cigars and cigarettes in quantities less than 3,000 enacted in 1866 to discourage smuggling, for which it has long been unnecessary. This law unjustly discriminates against an important industry of Cuba. Its repeal has been recommended by the Treasury and Post Office Departments. Unless this is done our merchants and railroads will find themselves deprived of this large parcel-post business after the 1st of next March, the date of the expiration of the convention, which has been extended upon the specific understanding that it would expire at that time unless this legislation was enacted. We purchase large quantities of tobacco made in Cuba. It is not probable that our purchases would be any larger if this law was repealed, while it would be an advantage to many other industries in the United States.

INSULAR POSSESSIONS

Conditions in the Philippine Islands have been steadily improved. Contentment and good order prevail. Roads, irrigation works, harbor improvements, and public buildings are being constructed. Public education and sanitation have been advanced. The Government is in a sound financial condition. These immediate results were especially due to the administration of Gov. Gen. Leonard Wood. The six years of his governorship marked a distinct improvement in the islands and rank as one of the outstanding accomplishments of this distinguished man. His death is a loss to the Nation and the islands.

Greater progress could be made, more efficiency could be put into administration, if the Congress would undertake to expend, through its appropriating power, all or a part of the customs revenues which are now turned over to the Philippine treasury. The powers of the auditor of the islands also need revision and clarification. The government of the islands is about 98 per cent in the hands of the Filipinos. An extension of the policy of self-government will be hastened by the demonstration on their part of their desire and their ability to carry out cordially and efficiently the provisions of the organic law enacted by the Congress for the government of the islands. It would be well for a committee of the Congress to visit the islands every two years.

A fair degree of progress is being made in Porto Rico. Its agricultural products are increasing; its treasury position, which has given much concern, shows improvement. I am advised by the governor that educational facilities are still lacking. Roads are being constructed, which he represents are the first requisite for building schoolhouses. The loyalty of the island to the United States is exceedingly gratifying. A memorial will be presented to you requesting authority to have the governor elected by the people of Porto Rico. This was never done in the case of our own Territories. It is admitted that education outside of the towns is as yet very deficient. Until it has progressed further the efficiency of the government and the happiness of the people may need the guiding hand of an appointed governor. As it is not contemplated that any change should be made immediately, the general subject may well have the thoughtful study of the Congress.

PANAMA CANAL

The number of commercial ships passing through the Panama Canal has increased from 3,967 in 1923 to 5,475 in 1927. The total amount of tolls turned into the Treasury is over $166,000,000, while all the operations of the canal have yielded a surplus of about $80,000,000. In order to provide additional storage of water and give some control over the floods of the Chagres River, it is proposed to erect a dam to cost about $12,000,000 at Alhajuela. It will take some five years to complete this work.

AGRICULTURE

The past year has seen a marked improvement in the general condition of agriculture. Production is better balanced and without acute shortage or heavy surplus. Costs have been reduced and the average output of the worker increased. The level of farm prices has risen, while others have fallen, so that the purchasing power of the farmer is approaching a normal figure. The individual farmer is entitled to great credit for the progress made since 1921. He has adjusted his production and through cooperative organizations and other methods improved his marketing. He is using authenticated facts and employing sound methods which other industries are obliged to use to secure stability and prosperity. The old-fashioned haphazard system is being abandoned, economics are being applied to ascertain the best adapted unit of land, diversification is being promoted, and scientific methods are being used in production, and business principles in marketing.

Agriculture has not fully recovered from postwar depression. The fact is that economic progress never marches forward in a straight line. It goes in waves. One part goes ahead, while another halts and another recedes. Everybody wishes agriculture to prosper. Any sound and workable proposal to help the farmer will have the earnest support of the Government. Their interests are not all identical. Legislation should assist as many producers in as many regions as possible. It should be the aim to assist the farmer to work out his own salvation socially and economically. No plan will be of any permanent value to him which does not leave him standing on his own foundation.

In the past the Government has spent vast sums to bring land under cultivation. It is apparent that this has reached temporarily the saturation point. We have had a surplus of production and a poor market for land, which has only lately shown signs of improvement. The main problem which is presented for solution is one of dealing with a surplus of production. It is useless to propose a temporary expedient. What is needed is permanency and stability. Government price fixing is known to be unsound and bound to result in disaster. A Government subsidy would work out in the same way. It can not be sound for all of the people to hire some of the people to produce a crop which neither the producers nor the rest of the people want.

Price fixing and subsidy will both increase the surplus, instead of diminishing it. Putting the Government directly into business is merely a combination of subsidy and price fixing aggravated by political pressure. These expedients would lead logically to telling the farmer by law what and how much he should plant and where he should plant it, and what and how much he should sell and where he should sell it. The most effective means of dealing with surplus crops is to reduce the surplus acreage. While this can not be done by the individual farmer, it can be done through the organizations already in existence, through the information published by the Department of Agriculture, and especially through banks and others who supply credit refusing to finance an acreage manifestly too large.

It is impossible to provide by law for an assured success and prosperity for all those who engage in farming. If acreage becomes overextended, the Government can not assume responsibility for it. The Government can, however, assist cooperative associations and other organizations in orderly marketing and handling a surplus clearly due to weather and seasonal conditions, in order to save the producer from preventable loss. While it is probably impossible to secure this result at a single step, and much will have to be worked out by trial and rejection, a beginning could be made by setting up a Federal board or commission of able and experienced men in marketing, granting equal advantages under this board to the various agricultural commodities and sections of the country, giving encouragement to the cooperative movement in agriculture, and providing a revolving loan fund at a moderate rate of interest for the necessary financing. Such legislation would lay the foundation for a permanent solution of the surplus problem.

This is not a proposal to lend more money to the farmer, who is already fairly well financed, but to lend money temporarily to experimental marketing associations which will no doubt ultimately be financed by the regularly established banks, as were the temporary operations of the War Finance Corporation. Cooperative marketing especially would be provided with means of buying or building physical properties.

The National Government has almost entirely relieved the farmer from income taxes by successive tax reductions, but State and local taxes have increased, putting on him a grievous burden. A policy of rigid economy should be applied to State and local expenditures. This is clearly within the legislative domain of the States. The Federal Government has also improved our banking structure and system of agricultural credits. The farmer will be greatly benefited by similar action in many States. The Department of Agriculture is undergoing changes in organization in order more completely to separate the research and regulatory divisions, that each may be better administered. More emphasis is being placed on the research program, not only by enlarging the appropriations for State experiment stations but by providing funds for expanding the research work of the department. It is in this direction that much future progress can be expected.

THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF

The present tariff rates supply the National Treasury with well over $600,000,000 of annual revenue. Yet, about 65 per cent of our imports come in duty free. Of the remaining 35 per cent of imports on which duties are laid about 23 per cent consists of luxuries and agricultural products, and the balance of about 12 per cent, amounting to around $560,000,000, is made up of manufactures and merchandise. As no one is advocating any material reduction in the rates on agriculture or luxuries, it is only the comparatively small amount of about $560,000,000 of other imports that are really considered in any discussion of reducing tariff rates. While this amount, duty free, would be large enough seriously to depress many lines of business in our own country, it is of small importance when spread over the rest of the world.

It is often stated that a reduction of tariff rates on industry would benefit agriculture. It would be interesting to know to what commodities it is thought this could be applied. Everything the farmer uses in farming is already on the free list. Nearly everything he sells is protected. It would seem to be obvious that it is better for the country to have the farmer raise food to supply the domestic manufacturer than the foreign manufacturer. In one case our country would have only the farmer; in the other it would have the farmer and the manufacturer. Assuming that Europe would have more money if it sold us larger amounts of merchandise, it is not certain it would consume more food, or, if it did, that its purchases would be made in this country. Undoubtedly it would resort to the cheapest market, which is by no means ours. The largest and best and most profitable market for the farmer in the world is our own domestic market. Any great increase in manufactured imports means the closing of our own plants. Nothing could be worse for agriculture.

Probably no one expects a material reduction in the rates on manufactures while maintaining the rates on agriculture. A material reduction in either would be disastrous to the farmer. It would mean a general shrinkage of values, a deflation of prices, a reduction of wages, a general depression carrying our people down to the low standard of living in our competing countries. It is obvious that this would not improve but destroy our market for imports, which is best served by maintaining our present high purchasing power under which in the past five years imports have increased 63 per cent.

FARM LOAN SYSTEM

It is exceedingly important that the Federal land and joint-stock land banks should furnish the best possible service for agriculture. Certain joint-stock banks have fallen into improper and unsound practices, resulting in the indictment of the officials of three of them. More money has been provided for examinations, and at the instance of the Treasury rules and regulations of the Federal Farm Board have been revised. Early last May three of its members resigned. Their places were filled with men connected with the War Finance Corporation, Eugene Meyer being designated as Farm Loan Commissioner. The new members have demonstrated their ability in the field of agricultural finance in the extensive operations of the War Finance Corporation. Three joint-stock banks have gone into receivership. It is necessary to preserve the public confidence in this system in order to find a market for their bonds. A recent flotation was made at a record low rate of 4 per cent. Careful supervision is absolutely necessary to protect the investor and enable these banks to exercise their chief function in serving agriculture.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The last year has seen considerable changes in the problem of Muscle Shoals. Development of other methods shows that nitrates can probably be produced at less cost than by the use of hydroelectric power. Extensive investigation made by the Department of War indicates that the nitrate plants on this project are of little value for national defense and can probably be disposed of within two years. The oxidation part of the plants, however, should be retained indefinitely. This leaves this project mostly concerned with power. It should, nevertheless, continue to be dedicated to agriculture. It is probable that this desire can be best served by disposing of the plant and applying the revenues received from it to research for methods of more economical production of concentrated fertilizer and to demonstrations and other methods of stimulating its use on the farm. But in disposing of the property preference should be given to proposals to use all or part of it for nitrate production and fertilizer manufacturing.

FLOOD CONTROL

For many years the Federal Government has been building a system of dikes along the Mississippi River for protection against high water. During the past season the lower States were overcome by a most disastrous flood. Many thousands of square miles were inundated, a great many lives were lost, much livestock was drowned, and a very heavy destruction of property was inflicted upon the inhabitants. The American Red Cross at once went to the relief of the stricken communities. Appeals for contributions have brought in over $17,000,000. The Federal Government has provided services, equipment, and supplies probably amounting to about $7,000,000 more. Between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 in addition have been provided by local railroads, the States, and their political units. Credits have been arranged by the Farm Loan Board, and three emergency finance corporations with a total capital of $3,000,000 have insured additional resources to the extent of $12,000,000. Through these means the 700,000 people in the flooded areas have been adequately supported. Provision has been made to care for those in need until after the 1st of January.

The Engineer Corps of the Army has contracted to close all breaks in the dike system before the next season of high water. A most thorough and elaborate survey of the whole situation has been made and embodied in a report with recommendations for future flood control, which will be presented to the Congress. The carrying out of their plans will necessarily extend over a series of years. They will call for a raising and strengthening of the dike system with provision for emergency spillways and improvements for the benefit of navigation.

Under the present law the land adjacent to the dikes has paid one-third of the cost of their construction. This has been a most extraordinary concession from the plan adopted in relation to irrigation, where the general rule has been that the land benefited should bear the entire expense. It is true, of course, that the troublesome waters do not originate on the land to be reclaimed, but it is also true that such waters have a right of way through that section of the country, and the land there is charged with that easement. It is the land of this region that is to be benefited. To say that it is unable to bear any expense of reclamation is the same thing as saying that it is not worth reclaiming. Because of expenses incurred and charges already held against this land, it seems probable that some revision will have to be made concerning the proportion of cost which it should bear. But it is extremely important that it should pay enough so that those requesting improvements will be charged with some responsibility for their cost, and the neighborhoods where works are constructed have a pecuniary interest in preventing waste and extravagance and securing a wise and economical expenditure of public funds.

It is necessary to look upon this emergency as a national disaster. It has been so treated from its inception. Our whole people have provided with great generosity for its relief. Most of the departments of the Federal Government have been engaged in the same effort. The governments of the afflicted areas, both State and municipal, can not be given too high praise for the courageous and helpful way in which they have come to the rescue of the people. If the sources directly chargeable can not meet the demand, the National Government should not fail to provide generous relief. This, however, does not mean restoration. The Government is not an insurer of its citizens against the hazard of the elements. We shall always have flood and drought, heat and cold, earthquake and wind, lightning and tidal wave, which are all too constant in their afflictions. The Government does not undertake to reimburse its citizens for loss and damage incurred under such circumstances. It is chargeable, however, with the rebuilding of public works and the humanitarian duty of relieving its citizens from distress.

The people in the flooded area and their representatives have approached this problem in the most generous and broad-minded way. They should be met with a like spirit on the part of the National Government. This is all one country. The public needs of each part must be provided for by the public at large. No required relief should be refused. An adequate plan should be adopted to prevent a recurrence of this disaster in order that the people may restore to productivity and comfort their fields and their towns.

Legislation by this Congress should be confined to our principal and most pressing problem, the lower Mississippi, considering tributaries only so far as they materially affect the main flood problem. A definite Federal program relating to our waterways was proposed when the last Congress authorized a comprehensive survey of all the important streams of the country in order to provide for their improvement, including flood control, navigation, power, and irrigation. Other legislation should wait pending a report on this survey. The recognized needs of the Mississippi should not be made a vehicle for carrying other projects. All proposals for development should stand on their own merits. Any other method would result in ill-advised conclusions, great waste of money, and instead of promoting would delay the orderly and certain utilization of our water resources.

Very recently several of the New England States have suffered somewhat similarly from heavy rainfall and high water. No reliable estimate of damage has yet been computed, but it is very large to private and public property. The Red Cross is generously undertaking what is needed for immediate relief, repair and reconstruction of houses, restocking of domestic animals, and food, clothing, and shelter. A considerable sum of money will be available through the regular channels in the Department of Agriculture for reconstruction of highways. It may be necessary to grant special aid for this purpose. Complete reports of what is required will undoubtedly be available early in the session.

INLAND NAVIGATION

The Congress in its last session authorized the general improvements necessary to provide the Mississippi waterway system with better transportation. Stabilization of the levels of the Great Lakes and their opening to the sea by an effective shipway remain to be considered. Since the last session the Board of Engineers of the War Department has made a report on the proposal for a canal through the State of New York, and the Joint Board of Engineers, representing Canada and the United States, has finished a report on the St. Lawrence River. Both of these boards conclude that the St. Lawrence project is cheaper, affords a more expeditious method of placing western products in European markets, and will cost less to operate. The State Department has requested the Canadian Government to negotiate treaties necessary to provide for this improvement. It will also be necessary to secure an agreement with Canada to put in works necessary to prevent fluctuation in the levels of the Great Lakes.

Legislation is desirable for the construction of a dam at Boulder Canyon on the Colorado River, primarily as a method of flood control and irrigation. A secondary result would be a considerable power development and a source of domestic water supply for southern California. Flood control is clearly a national problem, and water supply is a Government problem, but every other possibility should be exhausted before the Federal Government becomes engaged in the power business. The States which are interested ought to reach mutual agreement. This project is in reality their work. If they wish the Federal Government to undertake it, they should not hesitate to make the necessary concessions to each other. This subject is fully discussed in the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior. The Columbia River Basin project is being studied and will be one to be considered at some future time.

The Inland Waterways Corporation is proving successful and especially beneficial to agriculture. A survey is being made to determine its future needs. It has never been contemplated that if inland rivers were opened to navigation it would then be necessary for the Federal Government to provide the navigation. Such a request is very nearly the equivalent of a declaration that their navigation is not profitable, that the commodities which they are to carry can be taken at a cheaper rate by some other method, in which case the hundreds of millions of dollars proposed to be expended for opening rivers to navigation would be not only wasted, but would entail further constant expenditures to carry the commodities of private persons for less than cost.

The policy is well established that the Government should open public highways on land and on water, but for use of the public in their private capacity. It has put on some demonstration barge lines, but always with the expectation that if they prove profitable they would pass into private hands and if they do not prove profitable they will be withdrawn. The problems of transportation over inland waterways should be taken up by private enterprise, so that the public will have the advantage of competition in service. It is expected that some of our lines can be sold, some more demonstration work done, and that with the completion of the Ohio project a policy of private operation can be fully developed.

PROHIBITION

After more than two generations of constant debate, our country adopted a system of national prohibition under all the solemnities involved in an amendment to the Federal Constitution. In obedience to this mandate the Congress and the States, with one or two notable exceptions, have passed required laws for its administration and enforcement. This imposes upon the citizenship of the country, and especially on all public officers, not only the duty to enforce but the obligation to observe the sanctions of this constitutional provision and its resulting laws. If this condition could be secured, all question concerning prohibition would cease. The Federal Government is making every effort to accomplish these results through careful organization, large appropriations, and administrative effort. Smuggling has been greatly cut down, the larger sources of supply for illegal sale have been checked, and by means of injunction and criminal prosecution the process of enforcement is being applied. The same vigilance on the part of local governments would render these efforts much more successful. The Federal authorities propose to discharge their obligation for enforcement to the full extent of their ability.

THE NEGRO

History does not anywhere record so much progress made in the same length of time as that which has been accomplished by the Negro race in the United States since the Emancipation Proclamation. They have come up from slavery to be prominent in education, the professions, art, science, agriculture, banking, and commerce. It is estimated that 50,000 of them are on the Government pay rolls, drawing about $50,000,000 each year. They have been the recipients of presidential appointments and their professional ability has arisen to a sufficiently high plane so that they have been intrusted with the entire management and control of the great veterans' hospital at Tuskegee, where their conduct has taken high rank. They have shown that they have been worthy of all the encouragement which they have received. Nevertheless, they are too often subjected to thoughtless and inconsiderate treatment, unworthy alike of the white or colored races. They have especially been made the target of the foul crime of lynching. For several years these acts of unlawful violence has been diminishing. In the last year they have shown an increase. Every principle of order and law and liberty is opposed to this crime. The Congress should enact any legislation it can under the Constitution to provide for its elimination.

AMERICAN INDIAN

The condition of the American Indian has much improved in recent years. Full citizenship was bestowed upon them on June 2, 1924, and appropriations for their care and advancement have been increased. Still there remains much to be done.

Notable increases in appropriations for the several major functions performed by the Department of the Interior on behalf of the Indians have marked the last five years. In that time, successive annual increases in appropriations for their education total $1,804,325; for medical care, $578,000; and for industrial advancement, $205,000; or $2,582,325 more than would have been spent in the same period on the basis of appropriations for 1923 and the preceding years.

The needs along health, educational, industrial, and social lines, however, are great, and the Budget estimates for 1929 include still further increases for Indian administration.

To advance the time when the Indians may become self-sustaining, it is my belief that the Federal Government should continue to improve the facilities for their care, and as rapidly as possible turn its responsibility over to the States.

COAL

Legislation authorizing a system of fuel administration and the appointment by the President of a Board of Mediation and Conciliation in case of actual or threatened interruption of production is needed. The miners themselves are now seeking information and action from the Government, which could readily be secured through such a board. It is believed that a thorough investigation and reconsideration of this proposed policy by the Congress will demonstrate that this recommendation is sound and should be adopted.

PETROLEUM CONSERVATION

The National Government is undertaking to join in the formation of a cooperative committee of lawyers, engineers, and public officers, to consider what legislation by the States or by the Congress can be adopted for the preservation and conservation of our supply of petroleum. This has come to be one of the main dependencies for transportation and power so necessary to our agricultural and industrial life. It is expected the report of this committee will be available for later congressional action. Meantime, the requirement that the Secretary of the Interior should make certain leases of land belonging to the Osage Indians, in accordance with the act of March 3, 1921, should be repealed. The authority to lease should be discretionary in order that the property of the Indians may not be wasted and the public suffer a future lack of supply.

ALIEN PROPERTY

Under treaty the property held by the Alien Property Custodian was to be retained until suitable provision had been made for the satisfaction of American claims. While still protecting the American claimants, in order to afford every possible accommodation to the nationals of the countries whose property was held, the Congress has made liberal provision for the return of a large part of the property. All trusts under $10,000 were returned in full, and partial returns were made on the others. The total returned was approximately $350,000,000.

There is still retained, however, about $250,000,000. The Mixed Claims Commission has made such progress in the adjudication of claims that legislation can now be enacted providing for the return of the property, which should be done under conditions which will protect our Government and our claimants. Such a measure will be proposed, and I recommend its enactment.

RAILROAD CONSOLIDATION

In order to increase the efficiency of transportation and decrease its cost to the shipper, railroad consolidation must be secured. Legislation is needed to simplify the necessary procedure to secure such agreements and arrangements for consolidation, always under the control and with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Pending this, no adequate or permanent reorganization can be made of the freight-rate structure. Meantime, both agriculture and industry are compelled to wait for needed relief. This is purely a business question, which should be stripped of all local and partisan bias and decided on broad principles and its merits in order to promote the public welfare. A large amount of new construction and equipment, which will furnish employment for labor and markets for commodities of both factory and farm, wait on the decision of this important question. Delay is holding back the progress of our country.

Many of the same arguments are applicable to the consolidation of the Washington traction companies.

VETERANS

The care which this country has lavished on its veterans is known of all men. The yearly outlay for this purpose is about $750,000,000, or about the cost of running the Federal Government, outside of the Post Office Department, before the World War. The Congress will have before it recommendations of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other like organizations, which should receive candid consideration. We should continue to foster our system of compensation and rehabilitation, and provide hospitals and insurance. The magnitude of the undertaking is already so large that all requests calling for further expenditure should have the most searching scrutiny. Our present system of pensions is already sufficiently liberal. It was increased by the last Congress for Civil and Spanish War veterans and widows and for some dependents.

It has been suggested that the various governmental agencies now dealing with veterans' relief be consolidated. This would bring many advantages. It is recommended that the proper committees of the Congress made a thorough survey of this subject in order to determine if legislation to secure such consolidation is desirable.

EDUCATION

For many years it has been the policy of the Federal Government to encourage and foster the cause of education. Large sums of money are annually appropriated to carry on vocational training. Many millions go into agricultural schools. The general subject is under the immediate direction of a Commissioner of Education. While this subject is strictly a State and local function, it should continue to have the encouragement of the National Government. I am still of the opinion that much good could be accomplished through the establishment of a department of education and relief, into which would be gathered all of these functions under one directing member of the Cabinet.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Industrial relations have never been more peaceful. In recent months they have suffered from only one serious controversy. In all others, difficulties have been adjusted, both management and labor wishing to settle controversies by friendly agreement rather than by compulsion. The welfare of women and children is being especially guarded by our Department of Labor. Its Children's Bureau is in cooperation with 26 State boards and 80 juvenile courts.

Through its Bureau of Immigration it has been found that medical examination abroad has saved prospective immigrants from much hardship. Some further legislation to provide for reuniting families when either the husband or the wife is in this country, and granting more freedom for the migration of the North American Indian tribes, is desirable.

The United States Employment Service has enabled about 2,000,000 men and women to gain paying positions in the last fiscal year. Particular attention has been given to assisting men past middle life and in providing field labor for harvesting agricultural crops. This has been made possible in part through the service of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, which is cooperating with the States in a program to increase the technical knowledge and skill of the wage earner.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Construction is under way in the country and ground has been broken for carrying out a public-building program for Washington. We have reached a time when not only the conveniences but the architectural beauty of the public buildings of the Capital City should be given much attention. It will be necessary to purchase further land and provide the required continuing appropriations.

HISTORICAL CELEBRATIONS

Provision is being made to commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington. Suggestion has been made for the construction of a memorial road leading from the Capital to Mount Vernon, which may well have the consideration of the Congress, and the commission intrusted with preparations for the celebration will undoubtedly recommend publication of the complete writings of Washington and a series of writings by different authors relating to him.

February 25, 1929, is the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the capture of Fort Sackville, at Vincennes, in the State of Indiana. This eventually brought into the Union what was known as the Northwest Territory, embracing the region north of the Ohio River between the Alleghenies and the Mississippi River. This expedition was led by George Rogers Clark. His heroic character and the importance of his victory are too little known and understood. They gave us not only this Northwest Territory but by means of that the prospect of reaching the Pacific. The State of Indiana is proposing to dedicate the site of Fort Sackville as a national shrine. The Federal Government may well make some provision for the erection under its own management of a fitting memorial at that point.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

It is the policy of the United States to promote peace. We are a peaceful people and committed to the settling of disputes by amicable adjustment rather than by force. We have believed that peace can best be secured by a faithful observance on our part of the principles of international law, accompanied by patience and conciliation, and requiring of others a like treatment for ourselves. We have lately had some difference with Mexico relative to the injuries inflicted upon our nationals and their property within that country. A firm adherence to our rights and a scrupulous respect for the sovereignity of Mexico, both in accordance with the law of nations, coupled with patience and forbearance, it is hoped will resolve all our differences without interfering with the friendly relationship between the two Governments.

We have been compelled to send naval and marine forces to China to protect the lives and property of our citizens. Fortunately their simple presence there has been sufficient to prevent any material loss of life. But there has been considerable loss of property. That unhappy country is torn by factions and revolutions which bid fair to last for an indefinite period. Meanwhile we are protecting our citizens and stand ready to cooperate with any government which may emerge in promoting the welfare of the people of China. They have always had our friendship, and they should especially merit our consideration in these days of their distraction and distress.

We were confronted by similar condition on a small scale in Nicaragua. Our marine and naval forces protected our citizens and their property and prevented a heavy sacrifice of life and the destruction of that country by a reversion to a state of revolution. Henry L. Stimson, former Secretary of War, was sent there to cooperate with our diplomatic and military officers in effecting a settlement between the contending parties. This was done on the assurance that we would cooperate in restoring a state of peace where our rights would be protected by giving our assistance in the conduct of the next presidential election, which occurs in a few months. With this assurance the population returned to their peace-time pursuits, with the exception of some small roving bands of outlaws.

In general, our relations with other countries can be said to have improved within the year. While having a due regard for our own affairs, the protection of our own rights, and the advancement of our own people, we can afford to be liberal toward others. Our example has become of great importance in the world. It is recognized that we are independent, detached, and can and do take a disinterested position in relation to international affairs. Our charity embraces the earth. Our trade is far flung. Our financial favors are widespread. Those who are peaceful and law-abiding realize that not only have they nothing to fear from us, but that they can rely on our moral support. Proposals for promoting the peace of the world will have careful consideration. But we are not a people who are always seeking for a sign. We know that peace comes from honesty and fair dealing, from moderation, and a generous regard for the rights of others. The heart of the Nation is more important than treaties. A spirit of generous consideration is a more certain defense than great armaments. We should continue to promote peace by our example, and fortify it by such international covenants against war as we are permitted under our Constitution to make.

AMERICAN PROGRESS

Our country has made much progress. But it has taken, and will continue to take, much effort. Competition will be keen, the temptation to selfishness and arrogance will be severe, the provocations to deal harshly with weaker peoples will be many. All of these are embraced in the opportunity for true greatness. They will be overbalanced by cooperation, by generosity, and a spirit of neighborly kindness. The forces of the universe are taking humanity in that direction. In doing good, in walking humbly, in sustaining its own people, in ministering to other nations, America will work out its own mighty destiny.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a request?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, pertinent to the question we are about to discuss is an argument on the law involved, which was prepared by Mr. Price Wickersham, a distinguished lawyer of Missouri. It is so complete and sound an argument, and is so filled with research and learning, that I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD, and that whatever number of copies are necessary may be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, may I ask for a similar privilege for briefs and arguments which seem sound to us on the other side of the question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I certainly shall not object to that.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator from Missouri if the document which he now desires to have printed is the same document the printing of which was provided the other day for the use of the committee?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; it is.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is passed upon, I should like to say that I do not want to consent to a blanket request such as he has made. I shall, however, make no objection when he offers any particular document.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have not asked unanimous consent for any privilege for myself. I merely gave notice that I expect to ask a similar privilege when the time comes.

Mr. NORRIS. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, then the Senator from Pennsylvania will present a request to the Senate so that leave may be granted?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as I understand the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, it is to have permission to print arguments on his side of this question by those who might not be in the Senate. Such a request is a little indefinite; I think it is pretty broad. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] merely asked to have a specific document printed, and the Senator from Pennsylvania stated that he should like to have certain briefs and arguments printed. I do not think we ought to grant a request to print anything and everything that anyone on the other side may desire to have printed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not submitting any request now; he merely asked the Senator from Missouri whether he would object if a similar request should be made by him.

Mr. REED of Missouri. May I say that the brief which I have desired printed is merely a legal argument and does not discuss the particular cases at all? It is the presentation of an argument touching the rights and powers of the Senate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is exactly the same character of documents which I expect to include in my request when I make it. I do not, however, make the request now.

Mr. MOSES. It was the request of the Senator from Missouri to have the matter printed as a Senate document.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; and also to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE RIGHT OF THE SENATE TO DETERMINE THE QUALIFICATIONS OF ITS MEMBERS

[Price Wickersham, of the Kansas City (Mo.) Bar]

HAS THE UNITED STATES SENATE PLENARY POWER TO REJECT A SENATOR ELECT?

I. CONSIDERATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

1. Pertinent clauses.

2. The language is in the negative; in preliminary drafts of the Constitution the language was in the affirmative.

3. The requirements of age, citizenship, and residence are not "qualifications" but "disqualifications."

Section 2, Article I, of the United States Constitution provides:

"No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen."

Section 3, Article I, provides that Senators shall be chosen by the legislature of each State, and that—

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of 30 years and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen."

Section 5, Article I, provides:

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members." * * *

And further:

"Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member."

The above are all of the pertinent provisions of the Federal Constitution.

It will be noted that section 5, Article I, is a grant of power without limitation in the section itself, and unless section 3 can be construed as a limitation of the grant of power, then it follows that the grant of power contained in section 5 is unlimited in the Constitution.

It will be noted that the language of section 3 is in the negative. This is an important fact. In the original drafts of the Constitution the language of this section was in the affirmative and was purposely changed to the negative. Congressman Taylor, of Ohio, on January 23,

1900 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1075), in discussing this very issue said:

"It is a notable fact that in the first draft of this constitutional provision which provided for qualification of Representatives in Congress the language was affirmative and positive, and that when it was finally presented for adoption it appeared in the form in which we now find it.

"The slight contemporaneous discussion in the Constitutional Convention was upon the provision in the affirmative form. Why was it changed to the negative? Surely not for the sake of euphony. And certainly not to make it more explicitly exclusive.

"In the report of the committee on detail, submitting the first draft of the Constitution, this section read in the affirmative as follows:

"'Every Member of the House of Representatives shall be of the age of 25 years at least, shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least three years before his election, and shall be at the time of his election a resident of the State in which he shall be chosen.'

"In the discussion, Mr. Dickinson opposed the section altogether, expressly because it would be held exclusive, saying he was—

"'Against any recitals of qualifications in the Constitution. It was impossible to make a complete one, and a practical one would, by implication, tie up the hands of the Legislature from supplying omissions.'

"Mr. Wilson took the same view, saying:

"'Besides a partial enumeration of cases will disable the Legislature from disqualifying odious and dangerous characters.'

The requirements of section 3 as to age, citizenship, and residence are not "qualifications"; they are "disqualifications." This very question was discussed by John Randolph in Congress in 1807, and he said:

"If the Constitution had meant (as was contended) to have settled the qualification of Members, its words would have naturally ran thus: 'Every person who has attained the age of 25 years and been 7 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State from which he shall be chosen, shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives.'

"But so far from fixing the qualifications of Members of that House the Constitution merely enumerated a few disqualifications with which the States were left to act."

The same view was taken by Mr. Quincy and Mr. Key in the famous Maryland contested-election case reported in the Annual of Congress, volume 1808, at page 908.

Sections 5 and 3, taken together and properly paraphrased to get the true meaning, would read:

"The Senate shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, but no person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of 30 years and has been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen."

This construction of "negative" clauses is upheld by the courts. The case of Darrow v. The People (8 Colo. 417) is in point. A statute of Colorado made the payment of taxes a necessary qualification for membership in a board of aldermen. There was a provision of the Colorado constitution that "no person except a qualified elector shall be elected or appointed to any civil or military office in the State." The court said:

"It is argued that this provision by implication inhibits the legislature from adding the property qualifications under consideration. There is nothing in the constitution which expressly designates the qualifications of councilmen in a city or town, and this section contains the only language that can possibly be construed as applicable thereto. But it will be observed that the language used is negative in form—that it simply prohibits the election or appointment to office of one not a qualified elector. There is no conflict between it and the statute."

There is no conflict between section 5, which is a full grant of power to the Senate, and section 3, which simply prohibits the seating of a person who has not the three requisites of age, citizenship, and residence.

II. CONSIDERATION OF PROCEEDINGS OF CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

1. Pertinent features of Randolph, Pinckney, and Hamilton plans.

2. Proceedings in Committee on the Whole, August 10, 1787.

It is submitted that the above analysis of the language of the Constitution itself is determinative of the question under discussion. However, a brief survey of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention may serve to make plain the intent of the framers of the Constitution, and this requires a brief analysis of the three major plans for a Federal Constitution that were under consideration. It is necessary to know these plans, so far as this issue is concerned, in order to understand the proceedings which occurred when the clauses in question were under consideration. It is evident to the student of constitutional government that the Constitutional Convention used the structure of Parliament as a guide, in so far as this particular subject is concerned; it is likewise clear that the practice and proceedings of the House of Commons were, to say the least, a guide. Burdick in his excellent work, The Law of the American Constitution, page 168, says:

"In confining to the Houses of Congress the right to judge the elections and qualifications of their own Members the framers of the Constitution were following the practice of the English House of Commons."

The three plans were submitted by Edmund Randolph, Alexander Hamilton, and Charles Pinckney, which plans will be discussed in their reverse order because Randolph's plan was the one that was in the main followed.

Charles Pinckney's plan:

"ART. 5. Each State shall prescribe the time and manner of holding elections by the people for the House of Delegates, and the House of Delegates shall be the judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their members."

Under Pinckney's plan the Senate was to be elected by the House of Delegates. Pinckney was unqualifiedly in favor of removing the election of the Senators as far as possible from the people.

Hamilton's plan:

The convention met on May 11, 1787, and concluded its deliberations September 17 following. About two weeks prior to the close of the convention Hamilton prepared his plan and furnished it to Mr. Madison, frankly saying that he did not expect that his plan would be adopted but that he had prepared it in order that it might serve as an ideal toward which the United States might eventually work. His plan provided:

"ART. 2. The Assembly shall consist of persons called Representatives, who shall be chosen, except in the first instance, by the free male citizens and inhabitants of the several States comprehended in the Union, all of whom of the age of 21 years and upward shall be entitled to an equal vote."

The plan also provided that the Senate was to be chosen by electors elected by citizens of the several States, who shall have certain property qualifications, and also:

"The Senate shall choose its President and other officers; shall be judge of the qualifications and elections of its Members, etc."

No qualifications of any kind were prescribed in his plan for Senators and the only qualifications for Members of the House of Delegates was that as to age above quoted in article 2.

It will be noted that the Senate, under Hamilton's plan, was given the power to "judge of the qualifications" of its Members without limitation as to any qualifications in the plan itself. Hamilton had sat all through the convention and heard all of the arguments that were advanced upon this subject, and it is significant that in the plan which he prepared toward the very close of the convention he in no manner limited the right of the Senate to judge of the qualifications of its Members.

Randolph's plan:

Article 2 provided for a House of Delegates and Senate; article 4 provided that—

"The Senate shall be elected and chosen by the House of Delegates."

Article 7 provided that the Senate shall have the sole and exclusive power to declare war. This article and the one providing for the election of the Senate by the House of Delegates is cited to show that Randolph intended that the Senate should have extraordinary powers and that it should be far removed from the people themselves.

Article 5 provided:

"And the House of Delegates shall be the judges of the election, returns, and qualifications of their Members."

When the question under his plan as to whether the House of Delegates should be chosen by the people direct was first voted on it carried by a vote of 5 to 2, two States being divided. There was much discussion during the convention as to the "qualifications" or "prerequisites" as to age, citizenship, and residence in the several States, but there is very little reported as to the debate concerning the question at issue. It appears that shortly prior to August 10 the convention had directed the committee on detail to prepare a draft of a provision concerning property qualifications of Members of the Legislature, and accordingly, the committee reported the following draft:

"SEC. 2. The Legislature of the United States shall have authority to establish such uniform qualifications of the Members of each House, with regard to property, as to the said Legislature shall seem expedient.

"SEC. 4. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members."

On Friday, August 10, the following debate took place:

"Mr. PINCKNEY. The committee, as he had considered, were instructed to report the proper qualifications of property for the Members of the National Legislature, instead of which they have referred the task to the National Legislature itself."

He thereupon argued for a property qualification.

Mr. Rutledge seconded the motion. Upon a viva voce vote the proposition was overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. Madison then argued against the section.

Mr. Ellsworth agreed that the power given by the section was exceptional, but contended that it was not dangerous.

Thereupon Mr. Morris moved to strike out the words "with regard to property," in order to leave the Legislature entirely at large.

"Mr. WILLIAMSON. This would surely never be admitted should a majority of the Legislature be composed of any particular description of men—of lawyers, for example, which is no improbable supposition—the future election might be secured to their own body."

On motion to strike out "with regard to property," the vote was ayes 4, noes 7, Delaware not voting.

Mr. Rutledge opposed leaving the power to the Legislature, arguing that the qualifications for the Senate should be similar to qualifications for the State legislatures.

Mr. Wilson thought—

"It would be best, on the whole, to let the section go out. A uniform rule would probably never be fixed by the Legislature, and this particular power would constructively exclude every other power of regulating qualifications."

On agreeing to Article VI, section 2, the vote was ayes 3, noes 7, Delaware not voting.

The above quotations are taken from Madison's report of the debates and are very illuminating. It will be noted that the convention, according to Mr. Pinckney, had directed that the committee prepare a clause prescribing the property qualifications in the Constitution itself, but that the committee had left such power to the Legislature; that Mr. Pinckney's motion for a property qualification in the Constitution was defeated overwhelmingly; that the motion to strike out the words "with regard to property" was defeated 7 to 4; that then Mr. Wilson pointed out that if the clause "with regard to property" was left in the Constitution that such clause would "constructively exclude every other power of regulating qualifications."

It was evidently the intention and opinion of the convention that the power should not be so limited. The Constitution already had a provision in it that "each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own Members," and it is evident that the convention thought that such clause was sufficient to give to each House plenary power to judge qualifications, and consequently when a vote was taken as to whether section 2 of Article VI should remain in the Constitution it was voted down 7 to 3.

It appears that nothing further was said on this subject during the convention.

III. PROVISIONS OF STATE CONSTITUTIONS PRIOR TO ADOPTION OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

1. Origin of "judge * * * qualifications" clause.
2. Case of John Breckinridge, of Virginia.

It will be noted that Randolph, Pinckney, and Hamilton in their plans submitted to the convention all used the phrase "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members," or words of the same import. The coincidence of the use of the phrase by the three is indicative of the fact that it was not original with any one of them. What is the origin of the clause? It, of course, did not originate in England, because they had no written constitutions. We, therefore, must examine the constitutions of the States prior to 1789.

The Virginia constitution of 1776 provided for a house of delegates and a senate. The house of delegates was to be composed of—

"Such men as actually resided in and are freeholders of the same, and are qualified according to law."

And the senate requirements were the same as those of the house, except that members of the senate must be "upward of 25 years of age." The constitution further provided:

"And each house shall choose its own speakers, appoint its own officers, settle its own rules of procedure, and direct writs of election for the supply of intermediate vacancies."

And—

"Officeholders or ministers of the gospel of every denomination being incapable of being elected members of either house."

The above are the only pertinent provisions of the Virginia constitution. Nothing is said about the right of the house to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

An interesting case arose in 1780. John Breckinridge, a youth of 19, was elected to the house of delegates, which refused him admission upon the ground that he was too young to be intrusted with a decision of matters which were thought to be of such gravity to the State; thereupon his constituents reelected him to the house; the house again refused him admission upon the same ground; thereupon he was elected the third time and the house permitted him to sit. In analyzing this case it is clear that the constitution itself did not prescribe any qualifications except residence and freeholdership. There was no provision in the Virginia constitution specifically giving the house the right to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members.

A search of the records of the Virginia Historical Society fails to reveal the preservation of any debates upon this subject, but it is evident that the house of delegates assumed that it had the inherent power to judge of the qualifications of its members, regardless of the absence of a constitutional provision giving it such power. There were precedents for its action in the history of the English House of Commons and particularly in the case of Henry Downs which arose in the Virginia House of Burgesses in 1742, which is hereinafter commented upon.

The constitution of North Carolina of 1776 contains no such provision.

The first draft for a constitution for Massachusetts was defeated on March 4, 1778, and a second draft was submitted and adopted in 1780, which, so far as its senate is concerned, required a residence of five years and certain property qualifications—but no religious qualifications—and further provided—

"The senate shall be final judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their members, as pointed out in this constitution."

The constitution of New Hampshire of 1784 provided for a residence, property, and religious qualification, and contained the same words as above quoted from the Massachusetts constitution.

The Georgia constitutions of 1777 and of 1789 and 1798 contained provisions that—

"Each house shall be the final judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their members."

It will be noted that the Georgia constitutions did not incorporate the words "as pointed out in this constitution" contained in the Massachusetts and New Hampshire constitutions.

It will thus be seen that the first written constitution which contained the clause in question was the Georgia constitution of 1777. It is clear that the members of the constitutional convention were familiar with the constitutions of Georgia, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire. The convention, and particularly the committee on detail, had the choice of adopting the language of the Massachusetts constitution or the language of the Georgia constitution and they chose the language of the Georgia constitution, which contained no limitation of the grant of power. This fact is important in view of the contention made by Mr. BECK in his book, The Vanishing Rights of the States, that the John Wilkes case, hereinafter discussed, was "the great constitutional landmark of the eighteenth century and determined for all time the right of Englishmen to be represented in Parliament by members of their own choice." If the colonies, or later the States, or the Constitutional Convention placed any interpretation upon the Wilkes case, as contended for by Mr. BECK, it is truly remarkable that Georgia should have conferred upon each house of its legislature the right to be "the final judges of elections, returns, and qualifications of their members" without any limitation of the power whatsoever, and it is equally remarkable that the Federal convention should have done likewise.

IV. THE COLONIES PRIOR TO 1776 CONSIDERED THE RIGHT OF REJECTION AND EXPULSION AN INHERENT POWER OF LEGISLATIVE BODIES

Case of Henry Downs, Virginia House of Burgesses, 1742

Of course there were no constitutions of the Colonies which contained clauses similar to the one under discussion. Some of the Colonies were proprietary and some of the charters of the Colonies contained provisions for the functioning of their legislative bodies, and little information is available as to the exercise of the right by such legislative bodies to reject or expel their members. However, an interesting case arose in Virginia in 1742 in the house of burgesses. The journals of the house of burgesses (assembly, 1742–1747) contain the following account of the case of Henry Downs (p. 11):

Mr. Conway, from the committee of privileges and elections, reported that they had—

"Had under their consideration the information against Mr. Henry Downs, a sitting member, to them referred; and had examined the matter thereof, and heard the said Mr. Downs; whereupon it appeared to the committee from the transcript of a record of the court of Prince Georges County, in Maryland, produced to the committee, duly attested by the clerk, and certified under the public seal of the said county, that at a county court of the right honorable the lord proprietary of that Province, held at Marlborough Town, in and for the county aforesaid, on the 27th day of June, 1721, Henry Downs, together with Edward Brown and James Jones, all of the said county, were indicted of felony, in stealing one sheep, of a white color, of the price of 10 shillings, the property of a certain person unknown, on the 29th day of August then last past, at a place called the Chapel, in that county; and that the said Downs, upon his arraignment, the same 27th day of June aforesaid, did confess himself guilty of the felony and theft, so as aforesaid laid to his charge, and put himself upon the grace and mercy of the court. And thereupon it was considered by that court that the same Henry Downs, by the sheriff of that county, from the bar to the whipping post should be taken, and there being stripped naked from the waist upward, receive on his bare back 15 lashes well laid on by the sheriff aforesaid, so that the blood appear; and that after the whipping aforesaid, the said Henry Downs, by the sheriff aforesaid, be put on the pillory for and during the space of half an hour. And afterwards the said Henry Downs, the same 27th day of June aforesaid, was, with the consent of one Jacob Henderson, clerk (his master), sold by the court aforesaid, for one year and nine months, to one John Middleton, planter, to discharge the fees of the conviction aforesaid. But the said Henry Downs, the sitting member, denied before the committee that he was the same Henry Downs mentioned in the said record. But it appeared to the committee from the testimony of several gentlemen, members of this house, that the said Henry Downs, the sitting member, had lately confessed himself to be the same Henry Downs mentioned in the record aforesaid. Thereupon, upon the whole, the committee had come to several resolutions, which he read in his place and afterwards delivered in at the table, where the same were read.

"And the said Mr. Henry Downs was heard in his place, and withdrew.

"Then the resolutions of the said committee were again read, and agreed to by the house nemine contradicente, as follows:

"'Resolved, That the said Henry Downs having been convicted of felony and theft, and punished, as aforesaid, is unworthy to sit as a member in this house.

"'Resolved, That the said Henry Downs, for the causes aforesaid, be expelled this house.

"'Resolved, That the said Henry Downs be disabled to sit and vote as a member of this house during this present general assembly.'

"Mr. Downs was thereupon expelled the house."

It will be noted that the felony complained of was committed 21 years before Downs was elected, and that there was then no constitution of Virginia giving the right to the house of burgesses to judge of the qualifications of its members. Such right was assumed by the house to be an inherent power of legislative bodies.

V. GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF POWER OF "JUDGING QUALIFICATIONS" IN ENGLAND

1. Beginnings of right in Elizabeth's reign.
2. Political and constitutional situation upon accession of George III.
3. The John Wilkes case.
   (a) Statement of facts and crux and chronology of content.
   (b) Denial of conclusions reached by Hon. JAMES M. BECK in The Vanishing Rights of the States.

Hon. JAMES M. BECK, who is counsel for Senator-elect VARE, of Pennsylvania, in his book The Vanishing Rights of the States discusses at great length the case of John Wilkes, which arose during the reign of George III, and says:

"The Middlesex election was the great constitutional landmark of the eighteenth century. It determined for all time the right of Englishmen to be represented in Parliament by members of their own choice." * * *

A study of the history of those times and an examination of all of the facts involved in the Wilkes case makes it plain that Mr. BECK's statement is a gross exaggeration. There are many histories of English constitutional government that place very little stress upon this case; Macaulay, for example, barely mentions it. It is true, undoubtedly, that it was an important case and did have some effect upon American constitutional law and the attitude of the Colonies toward the King, but saying that it was the great constitutional landmark of the eighteenth century is to exaggerate the case out of all proportion. The whole trend of Mr. BECK's discussion of the case is that it was a death struggle between the electorate of Middlesex as such and Parliament as such; that it was a titanic struggle to determine whether the electorate should have a free and unlimited right to choose a member of the House of Commons and whether the house had any right at all to pass upon the qualifications of its members; that the contest presented a plain constitutional question, which was settled for all time in favor of the electorate as against the right of Parliament to pass upon the qualifications of its members. I contend that the conclusions drawn by Mr. Beck from this case are exaggerated and unwarranted.

In the first place, Mr. BECK permits his readers to believe that the Wilkes case was the first instance in the history of the House of Commons where the house had passed upon the qualifications of its members. He fails—and his failure arouses one's suspicion as to his impartiality—to advise the readers of his little book that there were precedents for the action of the house in expelling and rejecting Wilkes. Nowhere does Mr. BECK even intimate that the house had ever before attempted to pass upon the qualifications of its members, but the inference is left that the Wilkes case was the first case of its kind. Let us see what the facts are.

In May's Constitutional History of England, volume 1, page 374, in discussing the Wilkes case, the author says:

"The election [of Wilkes] was declared void, and there were precedents for this course. Citing May's Law of Parliament, fourth edition, page 59; Townsend Mem. II, 100; Cavendish Deb. I, 352."

Mr. BECK quotes from the argument of George Grenville and as an appendix to his book publishes the full text of the speech, but nowhere does he mention Lord Mansfield, who argued just as strenuously and ably to support the rights of the house to pass upon the qualifications of its members, nor any precedents cited by Lord Mansfield. Grenville was overwhelmingly defeated. To quote Grenville is like quoting from a dissenting opinion or a minority report.

In order to understand the Wilkes case and its influence, if any, upon our Constitution in this regard it is necessary to take a brief survey of English consitutional government and the status of Parliament prior to 1763.

Originally Parliament was but a creature of the King; gradually Parliament grew in power, its strength and influence being more or less dependent upon the character, personality, and power of the King and his ministers. At an early date the House of Commons assumed the right to judge of the elections and returns of its members. Taylor, in his Origin and Growth of the English Constitution, Volume II, page 202, says:

"Among the parliamentary privileges belonging either to the house as a whole, or to its individual members, which were thus asserted during the reign of Elizabeth should be noted here: (1) The right of the house to determine contested elections."

And at page 530, volume 1, he says:

"In the reign of Elizabeth this right was for the first time distinctly asserted in a case in which the lower house ventured to examine into the circumstances attending an irregular election that had occurred in the county of Norfolk."

Such was the beginning of the exercise of the right of the legislative body to determine election contests. A study of the growth of this right is instructive, particularly in view of the fact that our Constitutional Convention used the structure of Parliament as a guide in such matters.

In order to understand the Wilkes case it is necessary to briefly review the political situation at the time it arose, because Mr. BECK in his book leaves the plain inference that the electorate had, in the main, the same right that an electorate has to-day. A brief examination of English histories and particularly those devoted to English constitutional government will immediately dispel this impression. In 1760 Parliament was practically the pawn of the rich landlords; the owners of pocket boroughs and the rich and powerful dominated the house.

Gneist, in his English Parliament, page 304, says:

"The practice of parliamentary government in the eighteenth century could not, for that very reason, harmonize in any degree with the ideas entertained by theorists on constitutional law."

Pollard, in his Evolution of Parliament, page 339, says:

"The revolution had transferred power from the Crown to Parliament, but not from Parliament to the people * * *; elections simply meant a change of masters. Only twice in the eighteenth century was a general election held to settle a public question. Once in 1701 when William III appealed to the country against a Tory House of Commons; and, secondly, in 1784 when the younger Pitt appealed to it against Whig domination. For the rest ministers were changed, policies adopted and discarded, war declared, and peace made without the least reference to the electors. A member did what he liked in Parliament, subject to the whim of the owner of the borough for which he sat. * * * George III interrupted this comfortable state of affairs and turned against parliamentary magnates their own political arts. Their lack of public support facilitated George's operations. He could never have bribed and cajoled a really representative House of Commons."

George I and George II were Hanoverians who could not speak the English language. When George III succeeded to the throne his mother said to him, "Now, George, be a King," and he immediately started out to regain the ancient prerogatives of the King by wholesale purchase and bribery of Parliament, maintaining regular paymasters for such purpose, and he succeeded so well that he became an autocrat in fact.

The great majority of parliamentary seats at that time were owned by rich and powerful landlords, who sold the seats in Parliament to aspiring statesmen for large sums of money, the occupants doing the bidding of their masters. The King, seeing this situation, simply outbid the lords. It was but a contest between the King and the oligarchy of the nobility.

In Cheyney's Readings in English History, page 644, appears the following extract from the memoirs of Sir Samuel Romilly, which graphically reveals to us the situation as it existed:

"I shall procure myself a seat in Parliament unless I find that it will cost so large a sum as, in the state of my family, it would be very imprudent for me to devote to such an object, which I find is very likely to be the case. Tierney, who manages this business for the friends of the late administration, assures me that he can hear of no seats to be disposed of. * * * Tierney tells me he has offered £10,000 for the two seats of Westbury * * *; £6,000 and £5,500 have been given for seats with no stipulation as to time, or against the event of a speedy dissolution by the King's death or by any change of administration. * * * The truth is that the new administration has bought up all the seats that were to be disposed of and at any prices. Amongst others, Sir C. H. ———, the great dealer in boroughs, has sold all he had to the ministers. With what money all this is done I know not, but it is supposed that the King, who has greatly at heart to preserve this new administration, the favorite objects of his choice, has advanced a very large sum out of his privy purse. The buying of seats is detestable and yet it is almost the only way in which one in my situation, who is resolved to be an independent man, can get into Parliament. To come in by a popular election in the present state of the representation is quite impossible."

He later purchased a seat from the Duke of Norfolk, whose right to the borough was contested by Lady Irwin.

Romilly then wrote Piggott as follows:

"If I keep the seat either by decision upon petition or by a compromise, I am to pay £2,000; if upon a petition I lose the seat, I am not to be at any expense."

By the purchase of Parliament the King had become the master of the situation. And in order to maintain his prestige he started a newspaper called the Briton, which was edited by Lord Bute; and George immediately instituted a campaign against the press; he forbade the publishment of proceedings of Parliament; prohibited the admission of strangers during sessions of Parliament, and put a padlock upon its proceedings; George's high-handed conduct aroused great antagonism. John Wilkes, who was a rather brilliant but dissolute fellow, started another newspaper called the North Briton, in which he vigorously attacked the policies of the King.

During Bute's ministry the North Briton flourished, but upon Bute's resignation and the accession of George Grenville as Prime Minister, Wilkes published a supplementary number of the North Briton, No. 45, on the 23d of April, 1763, which contained a criticism of the King's speech to Parliament; thereupon Lord Halifax, the leading Secretary of State, issued a general warrant "to search for authors, printers, and publishers," and to bring them before him for an examination. Under this warrant Wilkes was arrested and thrown into the Tower. A week later he was released upon a writ of habeas corpus, having asserted his immunity from arrest by reason of his privilege as a member of Parliament. The warrants were afterwards declared illegal and Halifax was assessed with heavy damages. A little later Wilkes republished No. 45 and also 13 copies of an obscene Essay on Women, a parody on Pope's Essay on Man. Wilkes was afterwards served with a subpœna on information against him in the Court of King's Bench, to which, on the ground of privilege, he had not entered an appearance. "On the meeting of Parliament, however, in November, 1763, he lost no time in stating that if his privilege should be affirmed he was ready to waive it and to put himself upon a jury of his countrymen." "The only exceptions to the privilege of freedom from arrest which had ever been recognized by Parliament were 'treason, felony, and breach of the peace, or refusal to give surety of the peace.'" (May's Constitutional History of England, vol. 1, p. 365.) Notwithstanding that such was the law, the House of Commons voted No. 45 "a false, scandalous, and malicious libel" and "ordered it burned by the hands of the common hangman," and then, in defiance of their own previous resolutions, they resolved that "privilege of Parliament does not extend to the case of writing and publishing seditious libels nor ought not to be allowed to obstruct the ordinary course of law in the speedy and effective prosecution of so heinous and dangerous offense."

As to this resolution, May says:

"To the principle of the latter part of this resolution there can be little exception; but here it is applied ex post facto to a particular case, and used to justify a judicial decision contrary to law and usage."

Pitt remonstrated against the abridgement of the privileges of Parliament. The House of Lords, however, agreed to the resolution, but 17 lords signed a protest against the surrender of the privileges of Parliament "to serve a particular purpose, ex post facto, et pendente lite, in the courts below."

It was strenuously argued that the seditious character of the alleged libel could only be determined by the courts and that the resolution was a prejudgment of such fact, and the burning of No. 45 was execution before conviction. These arguments made a great appeal to the people. When the papers were attempted to be burned a large part of them was rescued by a mob from the hangman and removed to Temple Bar outside of the jurisdiction of the city, where a boot and a petticoat were burned in effigy of Lord Bute and the Princess.

Wilkes was then ordered before the house, but before appearing he fought a duel, was injured, and, beset with spies, he fled to Paris and remained there for a number of years.

In contempt of the house the proceedings were no longer stayed and he was expelled the house for these libels. The House of Lords immediately found the Essay on Woman, which Wilkes had really published for private circulation, to be an impious libel because it mentioned a spiritual member of the House of Lords, which constituted a breach of privilege. The lords addressed the King to prosecute. Wilkes was ordered into custody, but he had escaped and was therefore held an outlaw.

At the dissolution of Parliament in 1768 Wilkes, who had remained in Paris—an exile and an outlaw—offered himself as a candidate for the city of London. He was defeated. He then ran from Middlesex and was elected. There was great exultation among a certain class in London and there was great revelry and all the doors were marked with the number "45," and a great cry of "Wilkes and liberty" went up.

On the first day of the ensuing session, having appeared before the King's Bench on his outlawry, Wilkes was committed on a capias utlagatus. He was rescued by a mob, but surrendered, and the outlawry charge was reversed on a technical ground, but he was sentenced to 22 months in the Tower for the libels. During the first session Wilkes, being incarcerated in the Tower, was unable to take his seat, hence no proceedings were started. At the opening of the second session Wilkes, in a petition to the house, accused Lord Mansfield of having altered the record of the trial, and Mr. Webb, the solicitor, with having bribed a printer to testify falsely. "Thereupon his charges were found groundless and he was brought before the house to prove his charges. He perplexed the house by submitting whether, being a member, he could stand at the bar, without having taken the oaths and delivered in his qualifications. But he soon received the obvious answer that being in custody at the bar, an action affecting a member sitting in the house did not apply to his case." Wilkes was also charged with libeling Lord Weymouth by publishing certain articles which the house voted were "insolent, scandalous, and seditious libels." The motion which was made for Wilkes's expulsion was founded upon several distinct grounds, to wit: First, the Weymouth letter; second, "No. 45 North Briton" of five years before, for which he was already serving sentence and for which he had been expelled was libelous; third, the Essay on Woman was an impious libel; and, fourth, Wilkes was under sentence which disqualified him.

It was clearly demonstrated that these charges were cumulative and contrary to all English precedent—see Grenville's argument. Burke, Pitt, Dowdeswell, Beckford, Cornwall, and George Grenville argued powerfully against the cumulative nature of the charges; that the resolution of the house of five years before was ex post facto and illegal; that Wilkes had already been punished for grounds 2 and 3; and that punishment by expulsion was violative of the English constitution. However, the expulsion was voted by a large majority—it should be borne in mind that Wilkes had not presented his credentials nor had he been sworn in for that session. The histories discuss this case as one of expulsion, when as a matter of fact it is a case of rejection. He could not be expelled until he was sworn in and became a member.

Wilkes upon being rejected was immediately reelected without opposition (February 3, 1769). The following day Lord Strange moved:

"Resolved, That Mr. Wilkes having been, in this session of Parliament, expelled the house, was and is incapable of being elected a member to serve in this present Parliament" (February 17, 1769).

The motion carried, the election was declared void, and a new writ was issued.

On March 16, 1769, he was again reelected and again was rejected. A fourth election then followed—13th of April—when Colonel Luttrell, a member, vacated his seat and offered himself as a candidate against Wilkes. Upon the returns Wilkes received 1,143 votes and Luttrell 296; two days later the house declared that Wilkes being disqualified to sit, Luttrell had been duly elected. Wilkes was still in prison. Volume 28, Encyclopedia Britannica, eleventh edition, page 643, says:

"His prison cell was thronged daily by the chiefs of the Whigs, and large sums of money were subscribed for his support. So great was the popular sympathy in his favor, that a keen judge of contemporary politics declared that had George III possessed a bad and Wilkes a good character, the King would have been an outcast from his dominions."

That this was a contest primarily between the King and a subject and not between the House of Commons and the electorate is plainly indicated by the above quotation. Moreover, Sir Thomas Erskin May, K. C. B., in his The Constitutional History of England Since the Accession of George III, Volume II, chapter 9, contends vigorously that the prosecution of Wilkes was really an attack by the King upon newspapers and the liberty of opinion rather than a contest between Parliament and the electorate. In Volume I of May's Constitutional History, page 47, he says:

"(1767.) Parties had been broken up and prerogative triumphed. The leaders of parties had been reduced to insignificance, while the King had directed business affairs to his own will and upon principles dangerous to public liberty."

And at page 42 says:

"The King continued personally to direct the measures of the ministers, more particularly in the dispute with the American Colonies, which, in his opinion, involved the right and honor of the Crown. He was resolutely opposed to the repeal of the stamp act, which the ministers thought necessary for the conciliation of the Colonies."

Having been the personal instigator of the stamp act and having mistreated the Colonies in many ways, and having attempted to crush newspapers and prevent the freedom of expression of opinion upon public matters, and having resorted to illegal arrests and prosecutions of Wilkes and incurred the enmity of the Colonies, is there any wonder that South Carolina voted £1,500 to aid Wilkes in paying his debts?

The assertion that South Carolina voted this sum to aid the electorate of Middlesex in any contest with Parliament as such is not supported by history. South Carolina voted this sum as a contribution to help fight the King. The King had bought Parliament outright and usurped the power of the dukes and barons. Is it any wonder that many of them espoused the cause of Wilkes in order to fight the King?

They did not espouse the cause of the electorate, which up to that time never possessed any rights as such.

By the election of Luttrell, Wilkes was effectually excluded from Parliament, but the King's opponents many times thereafter used the case to continue the fight against the King. On January 9, 1770, Lord Chatham moved an amendment to the address denouncing the late proceedings in the House of Commons as—

"refusing by resolution of one branch of the legislature to the subject his common right, and deprive the electors of Middlesex of their free choice of a representative."

In opposition to the motion, Lord Mansfield argued that—

"in matters of election the Commons had a complete jurisdiction, without appeal; that their decision could only be reversed by themselves or by an act of Parliament." (May, vol. 1, p. 376.)

Lord Chatham's motion was defeated, and thereby the House of Commons again asserted its right to pass upon the qualifications of a member.

On January 25, 1770, Mr. Dowdeswell offered the following resolution:

"That the house in its judicature in matters of election is bound to judge according to the law of the land and the known and established law and custom of Parliament, which is part thereof."

Thereupon Lord North adroitly followed it out by a conclusion:

"That the judgment of the house was agreeable to the said law of the land and fully authorized by the law and custom of Parliament."

Dowdeswell's motion was defeated, and on the 31st of January he repeated his attack in another form, but with no better success. (May, vol. 1, p. 378.)

On February 2, 1770, Lord Rockingham offered in the House of Lords a resolution similar to that of Mr. Dowdeswell, which was defeated. Thus the House of Lords upheld the House of Commons. Shortly thereafter motion was made in the House of Commons for a "bill to regulate the consequences of the expulsion of members." The opposition to this was so great the bill was withdrawn. On May 1 Lord Chatham presented a bill for reversing the several adjudicates of the House of Commons in the Wilkes case. Lord Mansfield deprecated any interference with the privileges of the Commons, and the bill was rejected by a large majority. On December 5, 1770, at the next session of Parliament, Lord Chatham moved another resolution, which was defeated. On April 30, 1771, the Duke of Richmond moved to expunge from the journals of the house the resolution of 2d of February, 1770, in which they had deprecated any interference with the jurisdiction of the Commons as constitutional.

The motion was lost. A few days afterwards Lord Chatham moved an address for dissolution, on the ground of the violation of the law for the commons in the Middlesex election and the contest which had later arisen between them and the city magistry, but found not more than 23 supporters. Again the House of Commons went on record as to its rights. In 1772 Sir George Savile, keeping up the fight against the King, moved for a bill to secure the right of electors with respect to the eligibility of persons to serve in Parliament. Lord North declared that the proceedings of the commons had—

"been consonate with justice and the law of the land, and that to his dying day he should continue to approve of them."

The motion was defeated.

A similar motion was defeated again in 1773, and in 1774 Savile renewed his motion, which was defeated.

"The Parliament, which had been in continued conflict with Wilkes for five years and was now dissolved and Wilkes was again returned for Middlesex. According to the resolution of the Commons, his incapacity had been limited to the return Parliament, and he now took his seat without further molestation. Before the matter of Parliament Wilkes had also attained the highest civic honor, being elected lord mayor of London."

Now being a member, he sought to have the record of his incapacity expunged from the journals. Motion was lost; he secured only 171 votes. In 1776, in 1777, and 1779, and in 1781 he renewed his motion and was defeated each time. At last, on the 3d of May, 1782, his motion was carried and the record expunged.

Over a period of 19 years, from 1763 to 1782, Parliament voted twenty-five times against Wilkes and one time for him, and the one time that they voted for him in 1782 the house merely voted to expunge from the records the proceedings which declared his incapacity. It will be borne in mind that the resolution which was expunged was that of February 17, 1769, as follows:

"Mr. Wilkes having been, in this session of Parliament, expelled the house, was and is incapable of being elected a member to serve in this present Parliament."

In order to understand why this resolution of 1769 was expunged in 1782 it must be borne in mind that the power of the King at that time had waned; that the King's stubbornness had lost to England its American Colonies; that Wilkes had served as Lord Mayor of London and had been a Member of Parliament for eight years and had become powerful politically; that in 1779 Wilkes had been elected chamberlain of the city of London and the office had become his freehold for life; that in truth and in fact the 19-year contest had been primarily between himself and the press on the one hand, and the King on the other; that it was not a contest primarily between the electorate and Parliament. Under all these circumstances it was evidently deemed wise by the House of Commons in 1782 to expunge the record and let the matter drop. It is an exaggeration to say that the vote of 1782 which expunged this record was the culmination of a great constitutional contest.

Macaulay's History of England, Volume II, page 344:

"While seven administrations were raised to power and hurled from it in consequence of court intrigues or of changes in the sentiments of the higher class of society, the profligate Wilkes retained his hold on the affections of a rabble whom he pillaged and ridiculed."

It is remarkable that the above is the only mention Macaulay makes of the Wilkes case. If it was "the great constitutional epoch of the eighteenth century," it is unthinkable that Macaulay, of all English historians, would have so slighted it.

History of England (Andrews):

"But in the eyes of the people his [Wilkes's] persecution by Parliament was an attack on the liberty of the subject and the freedom of the press, and the expressions of popular disapproval showed how little sympathy existed on the part of the people, for the men who were supposed to represent them."

Mr. BECK, in his The Vanishing Rights of the States, says that the Middlesex election "nerved the Americans for the long struggle which led through Brandywine, Valley Forge, and Yorktown to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, where the right of electors to be represented by persons of their choice was, as it was thought, indestructibly written into the charter of our Government." When one considers the history of the Wilkes case and the political circumstances involved, and the constitutions of our States prior to the Federal Convention, one can not but be amazed at the intemperate and exaggerated language of the author. If the Wilkes case had the effect upon the American mind asserted by Mr. BECK—that it was a titanic struggle between Parliament and the electorate—is it not wondrous strange that Georgia, for instance, in 1777 adopted a constitution that conferred the unlimited right upon its senate to "judge the qualifications" of its members? Is it not amazing that not one word was said about the Wilkes case in the Federal Convention when the clause in question was debated and adopted? The answer is: History refutes Mr. BECK—

That the Wilkes case was not a contest between the electorate and Parliament, but was a fight against the King, and that the American Colonies so understood the matter, is evidenced by the Declaration of Independence itself. Has Mr. BECK forgotten the language and purport of that immortal instrument which says:

"The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world."

The declaration then enumerates 27 charges against the King personally, and the declaration then says:

"A prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people."

VI. THE RIGHT OF THE SENATE TO REFUSE ADMISSION TO SENATORS ELECT BEFORE INVESTIGATION OF ANY CHARGES TOUCHING QUALIFICATIONS

Charges touching the elections, returns, and qualifications of Senators elect have heretofore been made in 46 cases. Twenty-nine times the Senate has accepted the credentials of such Senators elect and investigated the charges afterwards, and sixteen times the Senate has refused to seat the Senators elect until the charges were investigated. Such practice has definitely established the right of the Senate to exercise its discretion as to whether it will seat before investigating or investigate before seating.

VII. CASES OF WHITTEMORE, ROBERTS, AND CANNON IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The case of Whittemore, elected to Congress from North Carolina in 1870, is perhaps the most interesting and illuminating case in the history of Congress, so far as this question is concerned. Whittemore was elected in November and was to take his seat 13 months thereafter. His credentials in due form were presented to the House. It was charged that after his election he had sold a cadetship for $500. The charges were referred by the House to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which investigated the charges and reported that the charges were true, and recommended that Whittemore be not seated. Thereupon Whittemore resigned and went back to North Carolina, and notwithstanding the fact that his district knew all about the charges that were against him, he was reelected and he returned to Washington with credentials for his second election in perfect order. The House declined to seat him, but referred the matter again to the committee, which again reported that the charges were true and that he be not seated, and the recommendation of the committee was adopted by a vote of 130 to 24.

Gen. John A. Logan was a Member of the House at the time, and he made a powerful speech against the admission of Whittemore in which he said:

"It is said that the constituency had the right to elect such a Member as they may think proper. I say no. We can not say that he shall be of a certain politics, or of a certain religion, or anything of that kind; but, sir, we have the right to say that he shall not be a man of infamous character. He is not merely a representative of the constituents who elected him, but his vote in the House is a vote for the whole country. It is a vote for the people of the whole country, and every district in the United States has the same interest in his vote that his own district has.

"Hence, if Congress shall not have the power or authority, or shall not have the right to exclude a man of that kind, then the rights of the people of the whole country may be destroyed by a district sending a Representative who may be obtained to vote in a manner which may be destructive of the rights of the people. Are we to be told that Congress has no right to prevent anything of this kind because of the right of any constituents to send whomsoever they please? * * *

"It is not that the people shall not be represented. Not at all. It is this: That the people of the country have no right to destroy their own liberty by filling Congress with men who, from their conduct, show themselves capable of the destruction of their Government. * * *

"Congress, being the representative of the whole people, are entitled to say that the right of the whole country shall not be destroyed by one or more districts directing in here a man or set of men capable of their destruction; and they, having knowledge of the facts and the power to prevent the mischief by exercising the rights of exclusion, they having right to exercise that power and thereby protect the interest of the country, and to preserve instead of destroy the right of representation * * *."

In considering the Whittemore case and in weighing its value as a precedent it should be borne in mind that the charge complained of was an offense punishable by law but for which, under the Constitution, he was presumed to be innocent until proven guilty, and the offense was committed prior to the last election and the facts concerning the charge were known by the electorate prior to the election. It was not a case where the charges arose after the election nor after he had been sworn in. The Whittemore case is, therefore, a powerful precedent to establish the right of either House of Congress to reject a Member elect.

The facts in the cases of Cannon and Roberts elected to Congress from Utah are so well known as not to need more than passing comment. The case of Roberts is typical of both. He was elected to Congress and presented his credentials in due form. The House declined to seat him and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the charges against him that he had been living in open polygamy. The committee reported to the House the fact that Roberts had three wives, giving the dates of marriage and the fact that he lived with them openly and recommended that he be not seated. The House by an overwhelming vote adopted the recommendation of the committee and such action of the House met with the full approval of the Nation. There was nothing in the Constitution making polygamy a disqualification for office, yet Congress exercising its constitutional and inherent rights as a legislative body refused Roberts and Cannon admission to the House. If it be said that polygamy is repugnant to our institutions and our sense of morality, may it not be claimed with equal justness and propriety that the expenditure of millions to secure a nomination for the Senate is repugnant to our institutions and our sense of political morality? If the House has a right to reject for such an offense the Senate has for the other. The majority report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Roberts case is a very able brief supporting the right of rejection.

VIII. OPINIONS OF AUTHORITIES ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

The authorities on constitutional law have not devoted much space in their text to a discussion of this question. It seems to be taken for granted that the House and Senate possess such power as an inherent prerogative of legislative bodies, the courts having no power to pass upon the action of the House or Senate in such matters.

That a legislature has the power to enact statutes increasing the qualifications for office holding prescribed in a constitution is admitted. Throop on Public Offices, section 73, says:

"The general rule is that the legislature has full power to prescribe qualifications for holding office in addition to those prescribed in the Constitution; provided, that they are reasonable and not opposed to the constitutional provisions or to the spirit of the Constitution."

Perhaps the best expression by an authority on constitutional law so far as this question is concerned is contained in Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, third edition, page 138, to wit:

"The power given to the Senate and to the House of Representatives each to pass upon the validity of the elections of its own Members and upon their personal qualifications seems to be unbounded. But I am very strongly of the opinion that the two Houses together, as one House, can not pass any statute containing a general rule by which the qualifications of Members as described in the Constitution are either added to or lessened.

"Such a statute would not seem to be a judgment of each House upon the qualifications of its own Members, but a judgment upon the qualifications of the Members of the other branch. The power is sufficiently broad as it stands. Indeed, there is absolutely no restraint upon its exercise except the responsibility of the Representatives to their constituents."

Also see reasoning of Judge Story in Point IX following:

IX. THE RIGHT OF THE SENATE TO JUDGE QUALIFICATIONS OF ITS MEMBERS IS NOT IN DEROGATION OF ANY INHERENT OR RETAINED POWER OF THE STATES

It was contended in the debate upon the motion to reject Roberts in 1900 that a Senator or Congressman was a representative of the State—a sort of ambassador to represent the State in the Legislature of the Union—and that the right of the State or district to name and select whomsoever it choose was one of the rights retained by the States when they entered the Union, and Articles IX and X of the Constitution were cited, to wit:

"ART. IX. Rights retained by the people. The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

"ART. X. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

Article X was construed in the case of Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 124), in which the court said:

"This clause does not contain a new grant of power to the States or people, but is simply declaratory of a preexisting condition."

Judge Story, in his memorable work On the Constitution, volume 1, section 627, says:

"The truth is that the States can exercise no powers whatsoever, which exclusively spring out of the existence of the National Government, which the Constitution does not delegate to them. They have just as much right, and no more, to prescribe new qualifications for a Representative as they have for a President. Each is an officer of the Union, deriving his powers and qualifications from the Constitution, and neither created by, dependent upon, nor controllable by the States. It is no original prerogative of States power to appoint a Representative, a Senator, or President for the Union.

"These officers owe their existence and functions to the united voice of the whole, not a portion, of the people. Before a State can assert the right it must show that the Constitution has delegated and recognized it. No State can say that it has reserved what it never possessed."

The title of Mr. BECK'S book, The Vanishing Rights of the States is thus seen to be a misnomer. No right of a State can "vanish" that never existed.

X. CONCLUSION. THE CONSTITUTION EXPRESSLY CONFERS THE POWER WITHOUT LIMITATION UPON THE SENATE; THE INTENT OF THE FRAMERS OF THE CONSTITUTION IS PLAIN; HISTORY SUPPORTS THE POWER, THE PRACTICE OF COLONIES, STATES, AND CONGRESS UPHOLDS THE POWER, AND THE BEST GOVERNMENTAL POLICY DEMANDS THAT THE SENATE EXERCISE THE POWER

We have seen that the Constitution expressly confers the power to "judge qualifications of its own members" without limitation; that the debates in the Constitutional Convention show that such was the plain intent of the framers of the Constitution; that the authors of the plans submitted to the Constitutional Convention all agreed that such powers should be conferred without limitation; that Georgia first conferred this unlimited power upon its senate in 1777; that the house of delegates of the State of Virginia in 1780 exercised this power without any constitutional provision and assumed that it was an inherent legislative power; that the Colony of Virginia in 1742 recognized and exercised this right as an inherent legislative power; that the House of Commons and the House of Lords recognized and exercised this right twenty-five times in the Wilkes case, and that such power was the growth of hundreds of years; that since the adoption of our Federal Constitution Congress has repeatedly exercised such power; that the profoundest students and authorities upon constitutional law declare that the power is absolute.

If there were no precedents to guide this Government, if there was no constitutional provision upon the subject, if the matter were to arise now for the first time, what would be the best governmental policy? Would the delegation of such a power to the Senate be fraught with danger to the Republic? It must be remembered that Senators are officials of the United States Government and not of the States. They legislate not for the States alone but for all the people of the Union. The vote of a Senator affects every State of the Union as much as it does the one from which he is elected. His vote may mean peace or war for the Union. Should not the Union have the right to protect itself against corruption in one of its parts? Should the whole suffer from the dereliction of a part? If it be said that one political party may corruptly and wrongfully decline to seat a Senator elect of another party, it must be admitted that such a contingency might arise, but it would not destroy the right of the State to represenation; another could be elected in his place. Other possibilities readily suggest themselves. For instance, the President might be a Republican and the Senate Republican and the House Democratic, and the House might refuse to pass any appropriation legislation in order to embarrass the administration. This is a contingency that might arise, but what sensible American believes it probable?

Exaggerated illustrations mean nothing; they are futile. As Senator DAVID REED, of Pennsylvania, in discussing this question in the Senate last spring, said:

"Illustrations can be drawn that make both sides of this question seem silly. We must be guided by reason and not by fancy."

Under our Constitution momentous questions are submitted to the decision of nine Supreme Court judges appointed by the President and not elected by the people. Generally speaking, these judges come from one class—those identified with large interests—and not from the masses; yet the people recognize that ours is a constitutional Government and that such procedure is in accordance with law. There is no real danger in submitting to 95 Senators elected by the people the question whether a particular Senator elect possesses sufficient moral or intellectual qualifications to sit in the greatest deliberative body in the world. We submit to the decision of the Supreme Court when it decides some vital matter by a vote of 5 to 4. May we not intrust the decision of the qualifications of a Senator elect to the judgment of a majority of 95 Senators elected by the people and responsible to them for their acts? Never in the past has a Senator or Congressman been denied a seat unjustly. History has proven the wisdom of the Constitution in conferring this power upon the Senate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Chair has stated the question as being "on the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska." The Senator from Nebraska has introduced two resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on Senate Resolution No. 1, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. No. 1) submitted yesterday by Mr. NORRIS, as follows:

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election;

Whereas said committee in the discharge of its duties notified FRANK L. SMITH of Illinois, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceeding, and the said FRANK L. SMITH appeared in person and was permitted to counsel with and be represented by his attorneys and agents;

Whereas the said committee has reported—

That the evidence without substantial dispute shows that there was expended directly or indirectly for and on behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH for the United States Senate the sum of $458,782; that all of the above sums except $171,500 was contributed directly to and received by the personal agent and representative of the said FRANK L. SMITH with his full knowledge and consent, and that of the total sum aforesaid there was contributed by officers of large public-service institutions doing business in the State of Illinois or by said institutions the sum of $203,000, a substantial part of which sum was contributed by men who were nonresidents of Illinois but who were officers of Illinois public-service corporations;

That at all of the times aforesaid the said FRANK L. SMITH was chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission, and that said public-service corporations commonly and generally had business before said commission, and said commission was, among other things, empowered to regulate the rates, charges, and business of said corporations;

That by the statutes of Illinois it is made a misdemeanor for any officer or agent of such public-service corporations to contribute any money to any member of said commission or for any member of said commission to accept such moneys upon penalty or removal from office;

That said SMITH has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity was given to him not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence is now and for many months has been on file with the Senate, and all of the said facts appear without substantial dispute: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the acceptance and expenditure of the various sums of money aforesaid in behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of free government, and taints with fraud and corruption the credentials for a seat in the Senate presented by the said FRANK L. SMITH; and be it further

Resolved, That the said FRANK L. SMITH is not entitled to take the oath of office and is not entitled to membership in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is not a pleasant task that is before me to-day. I realize that in a contest over the right to a seat in this body on the part of an individual our personal feelings sometimes are contrary to what we believe to be our duty. I know, so far as I am concerned—and I think it is true of every other Senator here—that in these two cases, affecting the Senatorships from Illinois and Pennsylvania, there is no personal feeling, no prejudice, and no ill will, and I would not be asking the attention of the Senate if I did not feel that involved in these two cases are fundamental questions of government which are so important that personalities sink into insignificance and fade away.

Mr. President, there is practically no dispute about what happened in the Illinois and Pennsylvania primaries in the spring of 1926.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I merely wish to suggest that we think that practically every statement of fact in the preamble of the resolution relating to the Pennsylvania case is untrue.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, perhaps it is not so important at this stage of the proceedings, but, since the Senator has made that statement, I wish to say that I believe every statement of fact in the preambles of both resolutions is true and that the evidence taken by the committee and now officially in possession of the Senate demonstrates that proposition.

As I have said, there is practically no dispute about what happened in the Illinois and Pennsylvania primaries in the spring of 1926. It was a battle royal of the millionaires. As to most of the candidates, it was not a contest in which the principles of government were involved. The tactics show that the fiercest part of the struggle was waged on the theory that a senatorial toga was on the auction block and that the highest bidder would get the coveted prize.

It stands undisputed that there were spent in the Illinois and Pennsylvania primaries several millions of dollars in an effort simply to obtain the nomination of candidates. In Pennsylvania more than $3,000,000 were spent by the various contestants. Of this amount, practically $800,000 were spent for the nomination of Mr. VARE, the successful nominee; and in Illinois, for Mr. SMITH'S nomination, in round numbers, more than $450,000 were spent simply for the nomination on the Republican ticket. These stupendous amounts stagger the imagination of the ordinary citizen. It was a race where the entrance fee debarred every man of modest means unless he was willing to mortgage his birthright to special interests that were interested in favorable legislation in our National Government.

In Illinois it is exceedingly interesting to consider the sources from which came the bulk of these great contributions. Of the enormous sum that was spent in Mr. SMITH'S behalf, more than $200,000 of it were contributed by representatives of large public-service corporations doing business in the State of Illinois. Not all of the contributions came from men who were voters or residents of Illinois. Some of it came from outside of the State, but it came from people who were part owners and directly interested in public-service corporations inside of the State of Illinois. The largest contributions from representatives of this kind came from Mr. Insull. The country knows that he is interested in gas companies, electric-light companies, and street-car companies in many parts of the United States. His interests extend from Maine to the State of Illinois. Does anybody believe that he made these contributions, or that through him his various corporations made them, because of a patriotic interest in the welfare of his country? Does anyone doubt that, in making these contributions, he had in mind the welfare of these public-service corporations in different parts of the United States in which he has a direct interest? Is there any doubt that he had in view his financial interests with the electric-light corporations scattered all over the country and does anyone think that, in his judgment, he was making a donation? Does anyone believe that he was doing anything except making an investment from which he expected ample returns in due time? He is the same man who defied the authority of the Senate and who to-day stands in contempt of this body by refusing to answer questions propounded to him by the Senate committee. It is quite apparent that his interest in the Senate of the United States is a financial one. He is interested in what he can get out of it. He is interested in making money and in nothing else. His contributions made in the campaign to the candidacy of Mr. SMITH were, at least in spirit, a direct violation of the statute of Illinois, because at the time he made these contributions Mr. SMITH was chairman of the Illinois commerce commission, a governmental institution that had direct charge of street-car companies, gas companies, and electric-light companies, both as to the service of such companies and as to the prices charged the consumers. It is quite apparent that his contributions in this primary were simply an investment.

And what explanation can be given to the contribution made in this campaign by Mr. Studebaker, a resident of Indiana? Why should he be interested in the Illinois primary? The only interest, at least so far as the record disclosed, is that he was interested in public-service corporations in Illinois. He, like Mr. Insull, was making an investment from which he expected returns in the way of favorable national legislation for his purposes and his investments.

Can any citizen of the United States look upon conditions such as these except with a feeling of regret, of horror, and even with shame?

In Pennsylvania, the sources of the contributions in behalf of Mr. VARE, which, in the aggregate, amounted to about $800,000, were not so clearly traced, but the evidence of fraud in the actual election, such as the absolute control of voters, the marking of ballots, the handling of ballot boxes, and other evidence indicating fraudulent voting and fraudulent counting and fraudulent registration were much more apparent than in Illinois.

For more than 20 years the Republican machine in Philadelphia has controlled elections in the great State of Pennsylvania without regard to the will or the wish of the voters—without regard to law or honesty—to such an extent that it is common knowledge in the State of Pennsylvania that the machine in Philadelphia and to some extent in Pittsburgh is able to secure results absolutely without regard to the wish or the will of the intelligent, patriotic people of the State. It is common belief and common knowledge in Pennsylvania that this machine can and does control the elections at its own sweet will and is able to put up a paper majority of any size that may be necessary to overcome any opposition in the remainder of the State.

Mr. VARE, the successful nominee at this primary, holds the city of Philadelphia in the hollow of his hand. He can give orders to his subordinates in advance of the election as to just what vote is desirable or necessary, and his willing political slaves will obey and bring in the required majority. His control is not confined to the Republican Party, but in the great city of Philadelphia he controls the Democratic machine as well. He deals out to them what offices may be necessary to secure their adherence to his will and his wish. His Democratic machine in Philadelphia is simply a small cogwheel in the greater Republican machine.

Nobody believes that there was an honest primary election in Philadelphia at the time of Mr. VARE'S nomination. His control over the situation in Philadelphia is well illustrated by what happened in the choosing of his successor in the House of Representatives when he became a candidate for the Senate. He selected a relative to succeed himself in the House. He had him nominated and elected; but before the 4th of March, when the man elected to take his place in the House was to be sworn into office, for some reason, he changed his mind about his successor. He desired, it appears, to have his attorney, JAMES M. BECK, to represent his old congressional district in the House of Representatives, and so he had his relative, who had been elected, resign before he had even been sworn in. He had his attorney, Mr. BECK, nominated and elected to his place in the House of Representatives. In this case he selected a man who, if the facts were known and shown, it would very likely appear is constitutionally ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives from any district in the State of Pennsylvania. But Mr. BECK has done great service in behalf of Mr. VARE. He has taken an active part in trying to convince the country that Mr. VARE must be seated by the Senate. He has been devoting a great deal of his time and energy in his effort to influence public opinion. He has written a book upon the subject. He has variously circulated it and to a great extent free to those who desire to read it. Copies of the book have been sent not only to Members of the Senate who will pass upon the case but also to the leading daily newspapers of the country. He has written articles which have appeared in the public press in advocacy of the seating of Mr. VARE. He has appeared as Mr. VARE'S attorney before a committee of the Senate. Obviously it would be of some advantage to Mr. VARE to select an attorney who would have the right to come into the Senate Chamber while his case is pending there; and so he has Mr. BECK elected to the House of Representatives so as to give him this great advantage.

From 1916 to 1921 Mr. BECK himself gave his residence as 100 East Sixty-fifth Street, New York City. From 1921 to 1924 he gave his residence as 1624 Twenty-first Street, Washington, D. C. He also gave Monmouth, N. J., as his legal residence when appointed Solicitor General in July, 1921. September 6, 1927, he registered for the first time in Pennsylvania as a voter from the eleventh election division of the seventh ward in Philadelphia. At that time he gave his last registration as Seabright, N. J., 1924. His family still lives in Washington, although he claims to have an apartment at 1414 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, and to have an established residence there. Any one who knows Mr. BECK, knows his social standing and his financial connections, and will take the pains to go to the apartment at 1414 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, will not for a moment believe that this is his residence. It is doubtful whether it would be found that his family has ever inhabited this place.

In the consideration of Mr. VARE'S case in the Senate it is not important as to where his attorney may live; but it is important as showing the absolute and supreme control of Mr. VARE over the city of Philadelphia in the selection of public officials, whether it be a justice of the peace or some other magistrate, a judge, or a Member of the House of Representatives. It is only one illustration of thousands that can be given showing that Mr. VARE and his machine control with an iron hand everything in the way of public office in the great City of Brotherly Love.

The amount of money expended in behalf of Mr. VARE'S candidacy simply staggers the imagination of the ordinary person; but, in my judgment, the iron rule of the Vare machine in Philadelphia is a greater menace to the fundamental principles of our Government than any other one thing connected with the contest for a seat in the Senate or elsewhere that has ever been waged in the history of our country.

In the primary, in the sixteenth division of the fourth ward, there were 404 names on the voting list, and the record there shows that 401 of them voted at this primary. Such a thing is possible, it is true; but every one familiar with voting anywhere knows that it is extremely improbable. A campaign that would bring out the entire vote as thus indicated would have to be one striking at the very roots of the Government, one in which every citizen took a deep interest. It is known that in this particular voting precinct there was no such interest. There was no reason why every one of these 404 voters, except 3, should come to the polls and vote. It is contrary to human experience. It is contrary to our knowledge as to what happens in all elections, and no one believes that it actually happened there.

But that is not the end of this peculiar condition. Of these 401 voters, every single one of them, it appears, voted for Mr. VARE. We all know what happened. It is common knowledge in Philadelphia and all over Pennsylvania as to just what took place. There is really no dispute in regard to it. The history of crookedness in our voting machinery is sufficiently well understood so that everybody knows what happened in this particular precinct. No one believes that out of 404 voters in that precinct 401 of them voted, and no one believes that 401 of them voted for Mr. VARE. But they were counted that way.

This precinct is not an isolated case. It is only an illustration of what happened all over the controlled districts in Philadelphia. Dead men were voted. Absent men and women were voted. Numerous officials have been indicted, some of them tried, and some have plead guilty to the illegal and underhanded means that were taken to give Mr. VARE this huge majority in Philadelphia. These methods have been carried on so long in that great State that the people of Pennsylvania expect it to occur in every election, and they are very seldom disappointed.

The election laws provide for a minority or Democratic representative on the various boards; but the fact that the Democratic nominee in these controlled precincts received no votes is only another illustration of VARE'S control, a control that extends over the Democratic Party as well as over the Republican Party.

Hundreds of similar instances could be given. The committee never completed its investigation in Pennsylvania, and it was precluded from doing so by the filibuster that took place in the Senate, carried on and engineered by those who were then and are now demanding that Mr. VARE be sworn in as a Member of this body.

In the fourteenth division of the twelfth ward in Philadelphia in 1924, the last presidential election, the registration totaled 250; but in the Vare election, when there was no presidential election or campaign, the registration went up to 469. Of those 469 all but 8 are recorded as having voted in the VARE primary, and of these 447 were recorded as having voted for Mr. VARE. A canvass that was made by a Philadelphia newspaper after this election was unable to locate 120 of the names on the registration list. Nineteen voters had vanished from one house, and another place, from which 14 were registered and voted, was found to be absolutely vacant.

In another division in the thirty-ninth ward there were 445 voters registered, and in that division 450 votes were actually cast.

When arrests were made after this primary election it was always the Vare men who furnished the bond and furnished the attorneys.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said there were 450 votes cast in the division to which he referred. Were they all cast for Mr. VARE?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know.

In another division a committee of citizens who made an investigation reported that there were 540 registered names, and every one of them, the record shows, had voted. Upon investigation it was found that four of these voters were dead; some were minors and not entitled to vote; some were registered in other divisions; and more than 50 had moved from this division more than five months prior to the election. Thirty-nine of them, by their own testimony, had not registered, and 136 were disqualified for other reasons, showing that out of the 540 registered and voting about 400 were illegally cast.

It is useless to follow through the record in these various divisions. It is always the same story over and over again. It is an illustration—yes, a demonstration—of the absolute and complete control of the election machinery in these controlled divisions by the Vare machine, and that such a thing as securing an expression of the people at an election is unknown and unheard of.

The expenditure of such huge sums of money for seats in the United States Senate can not be justified unless we desire to turn the Senate over to the multimillionaires of the country, who are willing to buy seats in this body the same as they buy merchandise across the counter. If this practice is to be followed, if the Senate is to condone this practice, then we have placed the seats in the highest legislative body in our land upon the auction block, and we have by indirection defeated every fundamental principle that underlies our governmental fabric.

If, under the circumstances, we seat Mr. SMITH and Mr. VARE, we have taken a step toward the nullification of every effort made by our forefathers when they laid the foundations of the Republic and have established a Government not based upon the consent of the governed, but dependent on the power of those who have the money to buy and the will of those who are ready to sell. If we are to seat these men and establish this precedent, then, to be consistent, we must haul down the flag from over the Senate and raise the dollar sign instead. If we are to seat these men, we take a step that, if followed to its logical conclusion, will make it impossible for any citizen of the United States to become a candidate for the Senate unless he himself is many times a millionaire, or unless he sells out in advance to those who are millionaires and who are willing to put up their money in order to secure a Senate that will legislate in favor of the interests of those who have bought the membership. Every assertion of the Declaration of Independence will have been attacked and destroyed. Every principle of democracy enunciated in the Constitution will be overthrown. Every sacrifice of our forefathers will have been in vain. An autocracy will have been established under the supreme and unlimited power of gold. No one will deny—no honest man can deny—that if our offices are sold for cash the Government must become corrupt and in the end must fail.

All honest men must admit that if, through the manipulation of machine politics and political bosses, by the use of money or the purchase of votes, elections are controlled, the result is the same in the end as though it were done by military force at the point of the bayonet. Self-government depends upon the free and untrammelled exercise of the elective franchise by its citizens. If senatorial offices are bought and sold, if the election is corrupted, either by the use of money or any other illegal means of coercion, the result is the same as though our Government were overthrown by military force.

Every republican form of democracy is founded upon the right of the free exercise of citizenship in the casting of the ballot. If this is destroyed or taken away, whatever be the means, the government fails; Bolshevism follows, and monarchy is in sight. There can be no dispute of this assertion. No student of political history will say that our Government can live if offices like seats in the United States Senate are bought and sold like chattels. It follows as night follows the day that the Government must fail because the very fundamental principle of its establishment is violated and taken away.

A primary election is just as important as a general election. As a rule, it is more important. This is particularly true in Pennsylvania, where, under any ordinary circumstances, no one but a Republican can be elected to the United States Senate. If the candidates of all parties are placed in nomination by illegal and corrupt use of money, then the citizen has only a choice between evils. He is deprived of the right of the expression of his choice at the ballot box as fully and as completely as though he were prohibited from voting by constitutional provision.

Does any man in his right mind believe that those who are willing to expend millions to gain a seat in the Senate do not expect a return for the money they have thus invested? If the money were spent by the candidate himself it might be said—and there might be some truth in the statement—that he spent the money simply for the honor that would come to him as a Senator. But the bulk of this money is not spent by the person nominated. It has been spent by contributors who are interested in national legislation—men who have waxed wealthy and have made their millions by national legislation favorable to their special interests.

Does anybody believe that these contributors care anything about the honor attached to the office or that they have any particular personal friendship for the candidates that they thus nominate? They consider it in a cold, businesslike manner. They consider the money spent as an investment from which they expect to get returns—not only returns that will pay a reasonable interest on the investment, but will return the principal many times over before the senatorial terms have expired.

Can such conduct be harmonized with the idea of a free government? Can it be said that anyone—except he be a citizen from Illinois or Pennsylvania—is not interested in this contest? The citizens of our country outside of Pennsylvania and Illinois have the same interests that those in Illinois and Pennsylvania have. We, like the great bulk of the citizens of Illinois and Pennsylvania, are unselfish in our desire that our National Government shall function according to the original conception of Washington and his followers and shall square with the ideas of Lincoln, who later preserved the Republic. Anxiety as to the result is shared by all the patriotic citizens of our entire country.

This issue is fundamental. It affects every part of our country equally. It bears directly upon the corner stone of our Government. All questions of legislation, such as the tariff, banking, the financial and temperance questions, and all others, fade into insignificance when compared with the one question as to whether seats in the Senate shall be put upon the auction block.

And are we helpless? Is there no way under our Constitution by which the Senate can maintain its standards pure and undefiled as the representative law-making body of a free and patriotic people?

It is boldly proclaimed by those who would seat Mr. SMITH and Mr. VARE that the Senate is helpless; that it must accept these men, and in the future accept similar men who boldly and brazenly acknowledge that their nominations were secured by the expenditure of unconscionable sums of money.

Fortunately, when our forefathers framed the Constitution they provided that the Senate should be the sole judge of the qualifications and the election of its Members. It made the Senate in such instances the supreme and final arbiter. From its decree there is no appeal, and no court or other body of men can withhold its arm by injunction or other process. It has the right under the Constitution and, in the proper case, it is its duty to hold that such vast sums of money spent for a nomination disqualifies the beneficiary from becoming a Member of this body. It has, as a matter of fact, already established a precedent that should control us in these cases. It has solemnly decreed that the expenditure of such sums of money is a species of corruption and disqualifies the beneficiary from a seat in this body. In the Newberry case, where $195,000 was spent to secure a nomination, the Senate declared that such expenditure was—contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the honor and dignity of the Senate, and dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government.

In the face of this record, can the Senate seat either SMITH or VARE? If it does, it will stultify itself and make itself the laughing stock of the country.

Who has ever contended that this declaration, so solemnly made by the Senate in the Newberry case, is either untrue or unjustified? Who has ever contradicted the solemn declaration that the expenditure of such sums of money is destructive of human liberty and will break down every barrier of protection to the rights and the liberties of the ordinary citizen? Who says now that the expenditure of such sums, if condoned, will not eventually bring destruction to the Government? There is no thinking man anywhere under the protection of our flag who does not know that such results must and will follow the debauchery of the electorate by such disreputable means. It follows, therefore, that the question involved is one that strikes at the very root of free government. It is one in which every citizen of the Republic has a direct interest. It is one where the rights of those who believe in freedom and self-government are directly affected.

It is clear also that the Constitution has given to the Senate the right to declare, as it has already done, that the expenditure of such sums of money to secure a nomination disqualifies the recipient from a seat in this body. If the Senate believes, therefore, what it has already declared, it follows, as night follows day, that its duty in the case of SMITH and VARE is to exclude them.

It is argued by those who contend that the Senate is helpless, and must seat these men regardless of the money spent to obtain their nominations, that the word "qualifications" in the Constitution refers only to the technical validity of the credentials of a Senator elect. If "qualifications" does not mean qualifications except in a limited sense, and if that limited sense and meaning is to be defined by those who desire to have Mr. SMITH and Mr. VARE admitted, then the Senate is helpless. Unfortunately for those who thus argue, there is no legal or justifiable reason for putting this limitation on the word. There is no language anywhere in the Constitution, either direct or implied, that would justify such an interpretation. And again, the Senate is the sole judge of what the word means, and is under no compulsion, either of reason or logic, to accept the limited definition given by those who would take away from the Senate its right to perform its constitutional functions.

The Constitution, in section 5, Article I, in speaking of the House and the Senate, declares that—each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

There is no limitation on this power. The Senate, under this language, is the only body in our Government that has a right to pass upon the qualifications of those who seek admission here as Members.

If, in the judgment of the Senate, the facts reported by this special committee, which stand practically undisputed, disqualify Mr. SMITH and Mr. VARE, or either of them, then it is its duty, of course, to vote accordingly. Neither is there anything in the argument that is made by those who claim the Senate is helpless, that if we can keep out of the Senate one who has spent, in its judgment, too much money in order to get in, we might abuse this power; that we might keep a man out because he was a Protestant, or because he was a Catholic, or because he was a pauper, or a railroad president.

The fact is that no power is delegated by the Constitution of the United States to any body or to any court which is not susceptible of abuse. It is impossible to frame a government and delegate any powers to any official without there being a possibility of the danger that such official will abuse the powers given to him. The power to pass on the qualifications of Senators must be given to somebody. Our forefathers, it is true, might have given it to the courts. They might have conferred this power upon some other tribunal instead of the Senate, and, if they had, the Senate would have to abide by the judgment of whatever official or tribunal had jurisdiction. But the truth is that our forefathers, in drafting our Constitution, gave this power to the Senate. It is not only a power but it is a responsibility—a responsibility that can not be shifted. It becomes our duty, under the Constitution of the United States, to pass upon the question presented, and we are required to pass on it because the Constitution of the United States says we shall pass on it. If the Senate should be deprived of this power because of a fear that we might abuse it, and the same doctrine were applied to all our tribunals, it would be an impossibility to give jurisdiction or power to anyone. For instance, for the same reason and with the same justification, it might be said that the Supreme Court of the United States might abuse the power confided in it, or that the President might abuse the power confided to him. This power must be lodged somewhere. Some official or some tribunal must have the right to pass on the disputed question of the right of any claimant to a seat in the Senate.

The same objection could be made to any other power that is given to the Senate. The Senate, for instance, is one of the bodies that passes on appropriations. We might say that if the Senate were so minded it could hold up the appropriations; it could refuse to appropriate for the salaries of judges, of the courts, the marshals, and thus strike the arm of law enforcement dead. It could, by refusing to appropriate money, stop the mails. It could cripple the hand of the President. It could do a thousand things that would bring about even the destruction of the Government. We might, with equal logic, say that it would be possible for the Supreme Court to render decisions that would bring the governmental temple tumbling down in ruins. And in all of these cases, the same as in the passing upon the qualifications of Senators, there would be no appeal.

There must be somewhere some tribunal that has the final say upon the proposition. In this case it is the Senate, and it is not only the Senate's right but it is the Senate's duty to meet the question fairly and decide it in accordance with its best judgment.

The Senate could be unreasonable. It has had that right from the very beginning and foundation of the Government. It has possessed this power for 150 years—and the Government still lives. There has never been a time when it might not have been possible for the Senate or some other governmental tribunal or official to have brought about the destruction of the Government. There never will be a government—there never has been a government—where those in control do not have this very power. It is inherent in every government and in every tribunal in every government

If those who are opposed to this power had been in the Constitutional Convention, they would have opposed the establishment of the Supreme Court because it could have been said that it might become radical, unreasonable, unpatriotic, and eventually bring destruction. They would have opposed the establishment of the office of President of the United States because he might use the Army and the Navy for the destruction of his own country. If the people who believe in this theory had been in the Constitutional Convention, they would have opposed the establishment of the House of Representatives and the Senate because if any power were given to them they might abuse it, and this abuse might be to such an extent as to bring about the destruction of the Government and there would, in the end, be nothing left but to do away with the Government entirely.

The question as to whether Mr. SMITH and Mr. VARE should be seated pending the decision of the question as to whether they will be allowed to remain here permanently is another point involved. It is true that in ordinary cases a Senator is sworn in upon the presentation of his certificate of election and, if his right to a seat here is then contested, he remains in the Senate as a Member until that question is finally determined by the Senate. That procedure is followed because, in the ordinary case, the only official evidence that the Senate has of the election or the qualifications of one claiming the right to be a Member of the Senate is the certificate of election. No other evidence of an official kind is ordinarily in the possession of the Senate, and hence, when the Senate is called upon to act, either to permit or to refuse to permit the applicant to take the oath of office, there is no evidence except the certificate of election. It, as everyone knows, is only prima facie evidence of the facts which it purports to state.

In the case of Mr. SMITH and Mr. VARE an entirely different proposition confronts the Senate. The Senate has appointed its committee and directed it to make an investigation, and in obedience to the commands of the Senate, the committee has gone into Illinois and Pennsylvania and made an investigation.

The committee has reported the results of its investigation to the Senate. It has submitted to the Senate the sworn testimony taken in this investigation and, therefore, the Senate is now, and has been for many months, in possession of the official information contained in the report of the committee and the evidence which it has taken. Therefore at the very threshold the certificates of election of these men are challenged by this report and this evidence. It is worthy of note, also, that both Mr. VARE and Mr. SMITH appeared in person before this committee and testified, and that the facts reported by the committee stand practically uncontradicted.

Taking this evidence and the report of the committee upon its face value, it absolutely annihilates the presumption in favor of the certificates of election. It brings both cases clearly within the rule laid down by the Senate in the Newberry case, and if the Senate still adheres to that rule and desires to enforce the principle of government therein enunciated it will refuse to permit either of these gentlemen to be seated.

Mr. DENEEN obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a brief statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOFF in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DENEEN. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The subject under discussion is Senate Resolution No. 1, which pertains solely to the case of Senator-elect SMITH, of Illinois. In discussing the resolution the Senator from Nebraska has made many references to the facts in the Pennsylvania case of Senator-elect VARE. I do not want to discuss those facts now, because I do not want to interfere with the consideration of the case from Illinois; but I do want the Senate to understand that we are not allowing those assertions to pass unchallenged, and particularly those assertions which began with such phrases as "No one denies," or "Everybody knows," or "There is no controversy about the facts," and such statements as that, because, as I expect to show the Senate, practically nothing in the preamble of the Pennsylvania resolution—that is, Senate Resolution No. 2—and in many of the statements which have been made by my esteemed friend from Nebraska, seem to us to be sustained by the record in the Pennsylvania case, although, of course, I know he made the statements in good faith and because he believes them to be true.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, the certificate of the Governor of the State of Illinois that on the 2d day of November, 1926, FRANK L. SMITH was chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Illinois as Senator from Illinois, to represent that State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1927, lies upon the table. It was referred in the last session to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and on the 4th of March last the committee reported that the certificate is in due and correct form.

The provisions in the Constitution relating to the qualifications for Senator are:

(a) The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. * * * (Seventeenth amendment.)

(b) No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years and been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State from which he shall be chosen. (Article I, sec. 3, par. 3.)

(c) No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress * * * who, having previously taken an oath * * * to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. * * * (Fourteenth amendment, sec. 3, par. 3.)

(d) No person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office. (Article I, sec. 6, par. 2.)

Senator SMITH possesses the qualifications prescribed in the Constitution for the office of United States Senator. He is more than 30 years of age, has been a citizen of the United States for more than 9 years last past, is a native of Illinois, and has been an inhabitant of that State during his lifetime. He is not disqualified by reason of any inhibition in the fourteenth amendment. He does not hold any other office under the United States.

At the election on November 2, 1926, there were three candidates for United States Senator in Illinois. FRANK L. SMITH received 842,273 votes; George E. Brennan, 774,943 votes; Hugh Magill, 156,245 votes.

The Constitution provides also:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business. * * * (Art. I, sec. 5, par. 1.) * * *

There is no dispute about the election of FRANK L. SMITH or the returns, and no contest has been filed against him by either of his opponents. It is sought, however, to add to the term "qualifications" meanings not expressed in the Constitution itself. As the Senate has the authority to judge the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, it sits as a high court of justice in rendering its judgment in this case. It is therefore of the greatest importance that we fix in our minds the constitutional definition of the term "qualifications."

On the meaning of the term "qualifications" I shall quote from several authorities.

Madison, in the Debates on the Constitution, said:

The qualifications of elector and elected are funamental articles in a republican government and ought to be fixed by the Constitution. If the legislature could regulate those of either, it can by degrees subvert the Constitution.

A republic may be converted into an aristocracy or oligarchy as well by limiting the number capable of being elected as the number authorized to elect. * * *

Madison further said:

The British Parliament possessed the power of regulating the qualifications, both of the electors and the elected, and the abuse they had made of it was a lesson worthy of our attention. They had made changes in both cases subservient to their own views of political or religious parties. (Madison's Papers, etc., p. 404.)

It will be remembered that in 1782 in the case of John Wilkes the House of Commons, on the motion of Wilkes himself, adopted this resolution:

That the said resolution [that of February 17, 1769, declaring him incapable of being elected] be expunged from the journals of the house as being subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors of this kingdom. (Hansard, vol. 22, p. 1409.)

Doubtless Madison had this resolution in mind when he made the foregoing statement.

In No. 62 of the Federalist, Hamilton said:

The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as remarked upon other occasions, are defined and fixed in the Constitution and are unalterable by the legislature. The term "Legislature" is used in the Federalist as synonymous with "Congress."

Justice Story, in section 625 of Story on the Constitution, states:

It would seem but fair reasoning upon the plainest principles of interpretation that when the Constitution established certain qualifications as necessary for office it meant to exclude all others as prerequisites. From the very nature of such a provision the affirmation of these qualifications would seem to imply a negative of all others.

Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, page 78, states:

Another rule of construction is that where the Constitution defines the circumstances under which a right may be exercised or a penalty imposed, the specification is an implied prohibition against legislative interference, to add to the condition, or to extend the penalty to other cases. On this ground it has been held by the Supreme Court of Maryland that where the Constitution defined the qualifications of an officer, it was not in the power of the legislature to change or superadd to them, unless the power to do so was expressly or by necessary implication conferred by the Constitution.

In Cushing on Law and Practices of Legislative Assemblies, second edition, page 27, section 75, the author states:

The Constitution of the United States having prescribed the qualifications required of Representatives in Congress, the principal of which is inhabitancy within the State in which they shall be respectively chosen, leaving it to the States only to prescribe the time, place, and manner of holding the election, it is a general principle that neither Congress nor the States can impose any additional qualifications. It has therefore been held, in the first place, that it is not competent for Congress to prescribe any further qualifications or to pass any law which shall operate as such.

In Foster on the Constitution, page 367, the author says:

The principle that each House has the right to impose a qualification upon its membership which is not prescribed in the Constitution, if established, might be of great danger to the Republic. It was on this excuse that the French Directory procured an annulment of elections to the Council of Five Hundred, and then maintained themselves in power against the will of the people, who gladly accepted the despotism of Napoleon as a relief.

Senator Crittenden, of Kentucky, in the Trumbull case, on March 3, 1856, said:

According to the plain meaning of the Federal Constitution, every inhabitant of a State, 30 years of age, who has been nine years a citizen of the United States, is eligible to the office of Senator. What more can be said about it? It is now supposed by those who contend that Mr. Trumbull is not entitled to his seat that it is competent for a State, by its constitution—and I suppose they would equally contend by any law which the legislature might from time to time pass—to superadd additional qualifications. The Constitution of the United States, they say, has only in part regulated the subject, and therefore it is no interference with that Constitution to make additional regulations.

This, I think will be plain to all, is a mere sophism, when you come to consider it. If it was a power within the regulation of, and proper to be regulated by, the Constitution of the United States, and if that Constitution has qualified it, as I have stated, prescribing the citizenship, was there anything more intended? If so, the framers of the Constitution would have said so. The very enumeration of these qualifications excludes the idea that they intended any other qualifications. That is the plain rule of ordinary construction; but, for a reason above all technical considerations, it is applicable here. The object of the Federal Constitution was to have a body framed by a uniform rule throughout the United States, coming here to constitute this great council of the country; coming here by the agency of the same elective power, the State legislatures; coming here under the same requirements and with the same qualifications; standing here upon a perfect and exact equality in all respects to represent the Nation justly and equally and with a sole regard to the common welfare of the Republic.

I quote from the speech of the Hon. Philander C. Knox, of Pennsylvania, delivered in the Senate on February 14, 1907, on the Reed Smoot case:

Anyone who takes the trouble to examine the history of the clause of the Constitution as to the qualification of Senators must admit that it was the result of a compromise. The contention that the States should be the sole judges of the qualifications and character of their representatives in the Senate was acceded to with the limitation: A Senator must be 30 years of age, nine years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen. Subject to these limitations imposed by the Constitution, the States are left untrammeled in their right to choose their Senators. The constitutional provision secures a measure of maturity in counsel, and at least a presumption of interest in the welfare of the Nation and State.

By another provision—namely, that relating to expulsion—the Constitution enables the Senate to protect itself against improper characters by expelling them by a two-thirds vote if they are guilty of crime, offensive immorality, disloyalty, or gross impropriety during their term of service.

* * * * * * *

If I were asked to state concisely the true theory of the Constitution upon this important point, I would unhesitatingly say:

First. That the Constitution undertakes to prescribe no moral or mental qualification, and in respect to such qualifications as it does prescribe the Senate by a majority vote shall judge of their existence in each case, whether the question is raised before or after the Senator has taken his seat.

Second. That as to all matters affecting a man's moral or mental fitness the States are to be the judges in the first instance, subject, however, to the power of the Senate to reverse their judgment by a two-thirds vote of expulsion when an offense or an offensive status extends into the period of senatorial service, and such a question can only be made after the Senator has taken his seat.

If to this it is objected that it contemplates admitting a man who may be immediately expelled, I reply that it is hardly proper to adopt a rule of constitutional construction and senatorial action based upon the theory that the States will send criminals or idiots to the Senate. Besides, it does not seem to me to be conceding much to a State after it has deliberately and solemnly elected a Senator after the fullest consideration of his merits to concede on the first blush of the business the States' intelligent and honorable conduct, by allowing its chosen representative admission to the body to which he is accredited.

Mr. President, in a speech which I delivered in the Senate on the 19th of January last on the subject matter of the credentials of FRANK L. SMITH as Senator designate I discussed his right to take the oath of office and reviewed precedents in the Senate as far back as the case of Gen. James Shields in 1849. Thirty-nine cases were reviewed. In 23 of these cases the oath was administered to the Senator elect or designate and their cases referred to appropriate committees for investigation and report. In 16 of the precedents the Senate refused to permit the oath to be administered and referred the cases to the appropriate committees for investigation and report.

In these 16 cases, the grounds for contest in 6 related to the loyalty of the Senator elect; in 7 the question related to irregularity of elections; in the case of Adelbert Ames of Mississippi in 1870, the contest related to inhabitancy; and in the case of General Shields in Minnesota and in the Louisiana cases, the objection was that there was no constitutionally organized State government.

It appears, therefore, that in these 16 cases where the oath was denied until charges were heard by committees, the grounds of the contest were the lack of the qualifications defined in section 3 of Article I of the Constitution—relating to age, citizenship in the United States, and inhabitancy—the inhibitions in the fourteenth amendment, and the organization of the State itself.

The precedents cited establish that since the case of General Shields in 1849, the Senate has in no case denied the right of a Senator elect or designate to take the oath of office before the hearing of his case, except where the qualifications specifically defined in the Constitution were involved.

I shall quote some opinions expressed by Senators in various cases upholding the right of a Senator elect or designate to have the oath of office administered:

Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, in the case of Senator SMOOT, said:

The chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], is obliged to be absent. He desired me to state on his behalf that he understands the orderly and constitutional method of procedure in regard to administering the oath to newly elected Senators to be that when any gentleman brings with him or presents credentials consisting of the certificate of his due election from the executive of his State, he is entitled to be sworn in, and all questions relating to his qualifications should be postponed and acted upon by the Senate afterwards.

If there were any other procedure the result would be that a third of the Senate might be kept out of their seats for an indefinite time on the presenting of objections without responsibility and never established before the Senate by any judicial inquiry. The result of that might be that a change in the political power of this Government which the people desired to accomplish would be indefinitely postponed.

Senator REED of Missouri, in the case of Senator MOSES, in November, 1918, said:

It is not, as I understand, the custom of Congress, when a man presents himself in either House with a certificate in proper form, to deny him his seat pending the contest. If, then, we were to refer this matter to the committee, what is to be gained by it? The certificate is in proper form; that is admitted. Do we propose to keep this man from his seat while the Committee on Privileges and Elections institutes an inquiry as to whether or not an election contest ought to be started, and then to keep him from his seat during all of the contest, for all the weeks or months that that contest might proceed? If that course is to be followed in this case, then it can be followed in all other cases. As was so well said by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], one-third of the Senate might be kept from their seats, and business of the greatest importance might be transacted while the representatives of one-third of the States of the Union were deprived of the opportunity to sit in this Chamber.

It seems to me, therefore, that the better practice is at once to permit the swearing in of any man who comes here with a certificate, the regularity of which is not challenged, and then, if a contest is instituted, let that question be tried; but in the meantime the State should not be deprived of its representation.

And in the case of Senator Newberry, in February, 1919, Senator REED of Missouri said:

After the primary in Michigan, and before the election, an effort was made to cause an investigation of the Michigan case. A great deal of talk and comment was had in the newspapers with regard to the large expenditure of money in that State. I took the position against having an investigation at that time because it seems to me that while clearly within the jurisdiction of the Senate under some of its powers, such an investigation would have the inevitable effect of influencing the election.

After the election was held, I took the position, and I still take the position, that, assuming that the credentials of Mr. Newberry are in proper and legal form, upon being filed here with the Senate he is entitled at any time after the 4th of March to take his oath of office and take his seat and to retain that seat until and unless the Senate of the United States upon proper proceedings shall oust him therefrom.

In the case of Major General Shields in 1849 Senator Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, made an illuminating speech, from which I quote and which I adopt:

Mr. President, I again rise to a question of privilege. I do it without any concert with my colleague, whom I desire to be sworn. I do it as the only representative present from the State of Illinois, which is entitled to two Senators on this floor. It appears from the credentials now on your table that James Shields was elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of Illinois for six years from the 4th instant. His credentials are in due form, and therefore those credentials entitle him to a seat in this body. He stands in precisely the same position in which other Senators stood who were yesterday admitted to seats, and if there is any objection on the ground of ineligibility it must arise after he has been sworn and taken his seat. This body has not jurisdiction over him or this matter until he has been admitted to his seat as one of its Members, for then alone can the question of eligibility arise. At present he has a right to a seat here and to a vote on any question that may arise until the Senate shall adjudge him ineligible. * * *

If, sir, in this case the ineligibility was shown on the face of the credentials, I would not ask that General Shields should be sworn; but if the credentials are in the usual form, and that is not doubted, the presumption is in his favor and he has a right to a seat here until the Senate shall adjudge him ineligible. All I ask, sir, is that the State of Illinois may be treated as other States are treated.

If there is no ineligibility on the face of the credentials to deprive him of the right conferred upon him by his State, this will furnish the first instance of the rejection of a Senator when his credentials are in due form. And why, sir, should there be such an exception now made in this case? I speak not, sir, on behalf of the claimant of this seat but I speak on behalf of the State of Illinois, which I in part represent. I insist, sir, that if you were now engaged in calling the yeas and nays, and his credentials had not been presented, it would be my right and my duty to present his credentials, and it would be his right to be sworn and vote on the pending question.

I call upon the Senate to pause and examine this question. The Senate is not yet organized. No business can be done until the constitutional rights of Members to their seats have been acceded to. I do not say that General Shields is eligible to a seat on this floor. I know nothing of the facts, sir, but I do know, from the credentials on your table, that he has been duly elected by the Legislature of the State of Illinois. His credentials are in due form. They are in such form as to make it a matter of right that he shall take his seat. I know also that yesterday you swore other Members who presented credentials identically the same. And I likewise know that hitherto you have never refused the right to a seat to any gentleman coming with like credentials. After General Shields shall have been sworn and admitted to his seat I shall throw no impediment in the way of any examination that the Senate may desire to make of the facts of the case. It is the right of this body then to institute an investigation, when objections are made; but—and I say it with great respect—this body has no right to reject without examination a Senator when he presents his credentials in due form showing that he has a right to a seat here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois insist on his question of privilege?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir; on the ground that the State of Illinois is entitled to two votes in this Senate. * * *

My motion is not made at the request, nor even with the knowledge, of General Shields. It is made by me, as a Senator from Illinois, insisting on the rights of that State. I have no objection to the Senator from Wisconsin making any statement he chooses at the proper time, but if he is to go on and make statements of facts with respect to the question at issue, thus superseding my motion, I contend that his course will be wholly irregular. I insist that the proper mode is to allow General Shields to be sworn and then to proceed with the investigation of the testimony in the case regularly. As regards the facts in the case, I do not know what they are myself, and am therefore not prepared at present to make any statement as to the legality or nonlegality of the election.

Mr. President, Article VI of the Constitution provides that a Senator shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. Senator SMITH is in the Chamber ready to take oath to support the Constitution.

Mr. President, Article V of the Constitution provides, among other things:

No State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

The State of Illinois has not consented to be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate; and, on the contrary, its general assembly has passed resolutions which I shall submit to the Senate and ask to have read at the close of my speech.

Regarding the resolution of the senior Senator from Nebraska, I have to state that at the hearing of the special committee of the Senate, under authority of a resolution passed on the 17th day of May, 1926, Senator SMITH was not represented by counsel, nor did he consult consul, so he informs me, regarding his testimony or the testimony of the other witnesses.

On the contrary, as is well known in the State of Illinois, Senator SMITH had been seriously ill in the spring and summer of this year. He had been a patient at the Mayo Hospital at Rochester, Minn., and later underwent two major operations at the Henrotin Memorial Hospital in Chicago, and was a patient at that hospital for 35 days. He returned to his home at Dwight, Ill., on July 10 and was endeavoring to regain his health and strength there when he was subpœnaed to appear before the special committee on the 26th of July last.

Part 2 of the hearings before the special committee at Chicago, from July 26 to August 5, inclusive, contains his testimony, and any Senator can readily ascertain the fact that no lawyer participated in his behalf in his examination. The record also shows that Senator SMITH did not attend or participate in any of the hearings of the committee except when he was under examination, nor did any attorney for him participate in the proceedings before the committee; and it is a significant fact that the chairman of the special committee, the senior Senator from Missouri, on the 19th day of January of this year, introduced the following substitute for the resolution offered by me (S. Res. 328):

Resolved, That the question of the prima facie right of FRANK L. SMITH to be sworn in as a Senator from the State of Illinois, as well as his final right to a seat as such Senator, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and until such committee shall report upon and the Senate decide such question and right the said FRANK L. SMITH shall not be sworn in or be permitted to occupy a seat in the Senate.

The said committee shall proceed promptly and report to the Senate at the earliest possible moment (p. 1923 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 69th Cong.).

And in support of this resolution the chairman of the special committee, the senior Senator from Missouri, said:

I want Mr. SMITH to have the fullest opportunity to appear by counsel, to try his entire case before a committee which can not be said to have in any manner prejudged the merits of the controversy. He may have evidence and he may be able to make a showing to that committee which was not submitted to the select committee. I would like to see that course taken, Mr. President, because I recognize the gravity of the question involved.

The substitute was adopted.

FRANK L. SMITH had been appointed Senator by the Governor of Illinois to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. William B. McKinley. There was no question about his credentials or qualifications, and the only point raised against him then, as now, was the testimony submitted to the special committee.

If the distinguished Senator from Missouri, who conducted the investigations for the special committee, felt that FRANK L. SMITH should have an opportunity to present his case before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I am at a loss to know why other Senators who did not participate in the hearings should endeavor to deny him that right, against all precedents in courts or legislative bodies. The senior Senator from Missouri, an eminent lawyer, knew that the Senate in judging the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members sits as a court, and that the principles which apply to the trial of cases in courts and the traditions of the courts should be observed.

On the 19th day of January last I submitted to the Senate Senate Resolution 328, which reads as follows:

Whereas FRANK L. SMITH, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Illinois, has presented his credentials, which are regular and in due form, and there being no contestant for the seat: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the oath of office be now administered to the said FRANK L. SMITH; be it further

Resolved, That his credentials and all charges which may be filed against him and all objections that may be raised as to his right to a seat in the Senate be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that committee is hereby directed to hear and determine all charges and objections which may be submitted and to report to the Senate after due inquiry and as early as convenient.

It will be observed that in the resolution offered by the senior Senator from Missouri and that by myself there was this difference only, that in the resolution of the Senator from Missouri provision was made that FRANK L. SMITH should not be sworn in or permitted to occupy a seat in the Senate until the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections had been made, while that introduced by me provided that the oath should be administered and all matters affecting his credentials, and all charges which may be filed against him, and all objections that may be raised to his right to a seat in the Senate should then be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for trial.

It is obvious, therefore, that those who voted for or against the resolution of Senator REED as a substitute for that which I offered had in mind a trial of FRANK L. SMITH before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and later in the Senate, should objections be made to his credentials or to his right to a seat in the Senate.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections on March 4 reported that the certificate of the Governor of Illinois appointing FRANK L. SMITH as Senator designate was in due form; and further, that the committee—was directed by resolution to report upon the prima facie right and also upon the final right of the said SMITH to a seat in the Senate. Owing to the illness of Mr. SMITH, the committee was unable to complete its hearings and the matter is now pending before your committee. (Rept. No. 1717, 69th Cong., 2d sess.)

Senator SMITH was ill during the debates in the Senate on January 19 and 20 of this year, and also at the hearings of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as stated in its report. No witnesses were called before the committee. It appears, therefore, that Senator SMITH has not had his day in court; and in view of this record I can not believe that the Senate, sitting as a high court of justice to judge the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members, is willing to act upon the record before it and refuse him a trial.

FRANK L. SMITH is entitled to have the oath of office administered to him because he was elected Senator from Illinois on November 2, 1926. The State of Illinois is entitled to have the oath of office administered to him because the vote which he received has not been questioned. On objections to his right to a seat in the Senate he is entitled to be tried according to the rules of law, and to defend himself and in his own proper person. He asks for nothing unusual in this matter, but he has the right to insist that the provisions of the Constitution and the precedents of the Senate be applied in judging his right to take the oath of office, and later, on objections to his right to a seat in the Senate, to have the same determined according to the rules of law.

Mr. President, I submit to the Senate copies of resolutions passed by the General Assembly of Illinois on the date appearing in the certified copy of the resolutions, and wish that they may lie on the table and be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolutions, and they will lie on the table.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Certificate No. 31953

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Louis L. Emmerson, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true photostatic copy of House Joint Resolution 45, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of the State of Illinois.

Done at the city of Springfield this 23d day of November, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] LOUIS L. EMMERSON,
Secretary of State.

House Joint Resolution 45

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois (the Senate concurring herein)—

Whereas the seventeenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States make mandatory that "the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for six years," and by reason of this constitutional provision the State of Illinois is entitled to and guaranteed two Senators in the Senate of the United States; and

Whereas on or about the 7th day of December, A. D. 1926, the Hon. William B. McKinley, one of the United States Senators representing the State of Illinois in the United States Senate, departed this life, and thereupon, by reason of this vacancy, the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH was, in accordance with the Constitution and statutes, appointed to fill the unexpired term of said William B. McKinley as United States Senator from Illinois, and the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH presented the credentials in proper form under the great seal of the State of Illinois to the United States Senate, and the United States Senate, without questioning the legal form and force of said credentials, nor questioning the constitutional qualifications of the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH, nor the guaranteed right under the Constitution of the United States for full representation to membership in the United States Senate by the State of Illinois, refused to administer the oath of office to the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH, and by that act denied to the State of Illinois equal representation in the said Senate of the United States; and

Whereas for a period of nearly 140 years, since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States and the amendment recited above, the rights of a sovereign State to equal representation in the Senate of the United States, wherein the credentials and constitutional qualifications were unquestioned, has never before been denied by the Senate of the United States refusing to administer the constitutional oath of office; and

Whereas this same question on an objection to the right of a Senator elect to take the prescribed constitutional oath of office was once before raised against the State of Illinois, but upon the able representation of the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois by Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, senior Senator from Illinois, in the matter of the credentials of Gen. James Shields, a Senator elect from Illinois, the United States Senate finally declared that the guaranteed constitutional rights of a sovereign State should not be abridged by a denial of the right of a Senator elect to take the oath, and by this action established a historic precedent; and

Whereas one of the early proposed amendments to the Constitution, making it possible for United States Senators to be elected by a direct vote of the people, was advocated by Senator John M. Palmer, of Illinois, and subsequently became a part of the fundamental law of the land; and

Whereas the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH has been by majority of the people of the State of Illinois, after a full presentation, discussion, and consideration of all issues involved, elected as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois, and no contest has issued against said election, and credentials have been accepted by the United States Senate as being in due form, and the qualifications of the said United States Senator elect are in full compliance with all constitutional and statute requirements; and

Whereas the only test provided in the Constitution of the United States as to the qualifications of a Member of the Senate of the United States is as follows:

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen"; and

Whereas Amendment XVII of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures"; and

Whereas Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides—

"* * * That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate"; and

Whereas Article I, Section 5, of the United States Constitution provides that—

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business";

"Each House may determine the rules of its procedure, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member"; and

Whereas reference to the above article and section of the Constitution provides: "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members," etc.; and

Whereas the uniform construction of this provision has been accepted that "qualification of its own Members" can not be construed otherwise, that in order to be a "Member" it is obvious that the taking of the required oath constitutes membership, and that previous to the taking of the required oath the Senate has no jurisdiction on another than a "Member," and the Senate shall, subsequent to the taking of the oath, be the judge of the qualification of the member; and

Whereas the Constitution of the United States further provides by amendment X that—

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people"; and

Whereas the foregoing are all of the relevant provisions in the Constitution with respect to the power of the Senate over the election of Senators; and

Whereas the credentials of the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH hereinbefore recited constitute a mandate of the choice of a majority of the people of the State of Illinois, at a general election, and which selection and choice by a majority of the people of the State of Illinois is uncontested, and that said election is for a period of six years, and that the continued refusal of the Senate of the United States to administer the oath of office to the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH as United States Senator from Illinois will result in depriving the State of Illinois of the full representation in the Senate of the United States for a period of six years, to which it is by the Constitution of the United States entitled and guaranteed: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the people of the State of Illinois represented in the general assembly, That in view of the foregoing it be respectfully presented to the Senate of the United States of the Seventieth Congress that the people of the State of Illinois are clearly within their rights in the expectation that the credentials of the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH, now on file in the Senate of the United States, entitle the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH to take the oath of office to which he has been elected as a United States Senator from the State of Illinois; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be directed to the Vice President of the United States, the constitutional Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Hon. CHARLES S. DENEEN, senior United States Senator from Illinois, with the request and direction that these resolutions be presented to the Senate of the United States, to the end that the sovereign State of Illinois shall not be deprived of the rights of full representation in the Senate of the United States, as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States; and, be it further

Resolved, That a delegation on the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois be, and the same is hereby, created, the said delegation to consist of the speaker of the house of representatives, the president of the Senate, and two members of the house of representatives, to be appointed by the speaker thereof, and two members of the senate, to be appointed by the president of the senate on the nomination of the executive committee, and it shall be the duty of said delegation on the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois to appear before the Senate of the United States, or any of its committees or subcommittees, upon the convening of said Senate and at any time thereafter, and to present to said Senate and its committees a consideration of the constitutional rights of this State, and on behalf of the people of this State respectfully to insist upon the recognition by the Senate of the United States of the constitutional right of this State to be represented in the Senate of the United States by two Senators, and that said constitutional right be recognized by the administration of the oath to the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH as United States Senator from this State.

Adopted by the house June 16, 1927.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have at my office, but not here at my desk, a letter from a member of the Illinois Legislature describing just how those resolutions were passed. I ask unanimous consent that I may have the privilege of inserting the letter at this point in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIFTY-FIFTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY, STATE OF ILLINOIS,
House of Representatives, November 16, 1927.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In this morning's Chicago Tribune appears an article under a Washington date line to the effect that Cornelius J. Doyle, of Springfield, Ill., personal attorney for Senator-elect FRANK L. SMITH of Illinois arrived in Washington yesterday to arrange the preliminary details of the latter's fight for admission to the Senate when Congress convenes on December 5.

Among other things, this article states that Mr. SMITH's insistence upon his right to take the oath of office will be seconded by a joint committee of the Illinois State Legislature specially appointed for the purpose, consisting of Lieutenant Governor Sterling, State Senators Richard Barr and John Daily, of the senate, and Speaker Robert Scholes and Representatives Reed Cutler and Gus J. Johnson, of the house of representatives, and that the resolution will be formally presented to the Senate by Senator DENEEN, and, in the event that Mr. SMITH's credentials are referred to the Senate Privileges and Elections Committee, the legislative group will demand to be heard in his behalf.

I take it that you and all other Members of the Senate who will be called upon to vote upon this most important question would like to be fully informed concerning the resolution to be presented by the joint committee of our general assembly, and with that thought in mind I am giving you the facts with reference thereto.

On June 8 there was introduced by Representative Cutler a bill (H. B. 757) almost identical in its terms with the resolution above referred to, which instead of being referred to a committee, as is our usual practice, was read a first time and ordered to a second reading without reference. On the following day, when the bill was called up on second reading, Representative O'Grady moved to amend the bill by striking therefrom the enacting clause. After a short debate a motion to table the amendment carried by a vote of 74 to 51. Among the 51 opposed to the bill were 11 of the best-known Republicans in the house, including Homer J. Tice, one of the veteran members, and Roger F. Little, former Republican floor leader; also M. L. Igoe, present Democratic floor leader, and John F. Devine, former minority leader.

Between June 9 and June 16 Representative Cutler, the sponsor of the bill, came to my desk and asked me if I could not see my way clear to refrain from speaking against the bill on third reading (I having spoken against it on second reading). This I declined to do. The bill was never called up on third reading but on June 16 was tabled. On the same day, however, he introduced the resolution, which, as before stated, was almost identical with the tabled house bill and, as originally introduced, provided for the creation of a delegation consisting of six members from the house and senate, representing the two major parties. Prominent Democratic members immediately objected to any representation of their party, and the resolution was accordingly amended so as to leave out any provision for appointment of Democrats on the delegation, which explains why all of the members of the joint committee who will appear at Washington are Republicans.

The resolution as thus changed was passed by a viva voce vote, no record being made of the members voting for and against it. Indeed, as I recall it, the speaker, as was his habit in the handling of resolutions, did not even call for the negative vote.

This, then, is the resolution which Senator DENEEN, according to the Tribune article, will be asked to present to the Senate or which will be presented to your Committee on Privileges and Elections by Mr. SMITH'S attorney as evidence, I suppose, that our general assembly is unanimously in favor of the admission to the United States Senate of Mr. SMITH. Rather, I think, the roll call of 74 to 51 represented the sentiment of the house members, even after Representative Cutler, Republican floor leader, with the State administration behind him, had done what he could to "line up" members for his bill.

I am writing similar letters to a number of your colleagues.

Have met you at Waupaca.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD P. CASTLE,
112 West Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 7, 1927, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, December 6, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, Thou art a great and gentle Father; One who forgives our sins and sustains us with undying hope. For these unspeakable mercies we thank Thee. Do Thou set us free from all evil desire; cleanse our hearts from all inordinate affections, and may our love for the pure and good grow with each succeeding day. O blend Thy heart with ours and grant us the sympathy that takes its impressions from the duties that pass our way. Raise us to the height of a fine aspiration and lift us to the summit of a compelling faith. Teach us the courage of patience, the strength of endurance, and the real power and value of self-restraint. Bless and guard our native land and may the spirit of truth be incarnated in all our fellow citizens and in all our institutions. We pray in the name of the Great Teacher. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

Mr. BOIES, of the eleventh district of the State of Iowa, and Mr. MEAD, of the forty-second district of the State of New York, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

PRINTING AND BINDING

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BEERS], if he is on the floor. In the printing resolution which was presented yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BEERS] I notice it provides:

That the standing committee of the House of Representatives, and the floor leader and the chairman of the conference minority are hereby authorized;

And so forth. That was the old designation, but that has been changed by law and it stands now just simply minority leader under the statutes. I think such change ought to be made in the resolution because some question might arise in the comptroller's office.

Mr. SNELL. I do not see the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the floor, but I think it would be perfectly agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have that change made.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania simply followed the form as it has been used heretofore, and that he would have no objection to this change being made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that the best method of accomplishing the result would be to request that the proceedings incident to the adoption of the resolution be vacated and that the resolution be adopted with the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. RATHBONE, Representative at Large from the State of Illinois, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed on the part of the House to join with a similar committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, has performed that duty and has been informed by the President that he will communicate with Congress forthwith by a message in writing.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS AND THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a resolution for the election of members of two committees—the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations. I therefore send to the Clerk's desk a resolution providing for the election of members of the Committee on Ways and Means and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 37

Resolved, That the following Members be elected as members of the Committee on Ways and Means:

William R. Green, of Iowa; Willis C. Hawley, of Oregon; Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts; Isaac Bacharach, of New Jersey; Lindley H. Hadley, of Washington; Charles B. Timberlake, of Colorado; Henry W. Watson, of Pennsylvania; James C. McLaughlin, of Michigan; Charles C. Kearns, of Ohio; Carl R. Chindblom, of Illinois; Frank Crowther, of New York; Charles L. Faust, of Missouri; Richard S. Aldrich, of Rhode Island; Thaddeus C. Sweet, of New York; and Harry A. Estep of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 38

Resolved, That the following-named Representatives be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing Committee of the House on Ways and Means:

John N. Garner, of Texas; James W. Collier, of Mississippi; William A. Oldfield, of Arkansas; Charles R. Crisp, of Georgia; John F. Carew, of New York; Whitmell P. Martin, of Louisiana; Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois; Cordell Hull, of Tennessee; Clement C. Dickinson, of Missouri; and Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further resolution providing for the election of members of the Appropriations Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 39

Resolved, That the following Members be elected to membership on the Committee on Appropriations:

Martin B. Madden, of Illinois; Daniel R. Anthony, jr., of Kansas; William R. Wood, of Indiana; Louis C. Cramton, of Michigan; Edward H. Wason, of New Hampshire; George Holden Tinkham, of Massachusetts; Burton L. French, of Idaho; Milton W. Shreve, of Pennsylvania; L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa; Frank Murphy, of Ohio; John W. Summers, of Washington; Henry E. Barbour, of California; Ernest R. Ackerman, of New Jersey; Guy U. Hardy, of Colorado; John Taber, of New York; Maurice H. Thatcher, of Kentucky; Frank Clague, of Minnesota; Robert G. Simmons, of Nebraska; William P. Holaday, of Illinois; Robert L. Bacon, of New York; and George A. Welsh, of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am not ready at this moment to nominate the Democratic members of the Committee on Appropriations. I was talking to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] a moment ago, and we thought we could possibly do this, so as to facilitate the action of this committee in reporting the emergency deficiency bill: Nominate the Democratic members of the Committee on Appropriations in the Sixty-ninth Congress who were reelected to the Seventieth Congress as members of the Committee on Appropriations. We are not at this moment prepared to report to our caucus, because under our organization on this side of the House we must report to the caucus for confirmation of the action taken, and we have not yet had that caucus.

Mr. TILSON. I trust the gentleman will move to elect the Members who were members of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I nominate for membership on the Committee on Appropriations such members of that committee in the Sixty-ninth Congress as were reelected to the Seventieth Congress, and move their election.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the Appropriations Committee as now selected report the deficiency appropriation bill without the new Members that are to be selected from the Democratic side?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; they will report with such members as were elected to-day or those that have already been elected by the House.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If the House takes such action, will it not deny the new Members that go on the Committee on Appropriations the right to have a voice in any matter with respect to the deficiency appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there were a number of committees of the last Congress whose membership was not actually filled.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I understand, Mr. Speaker; but the Committee on Appropriations is going to report a bill and that committee is not complete.

The SPEAKER. A majority, of course, can report a bill.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the two committees just named—Ways and Means and Appropriations—may have leave of the House to sit during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have the right to report the deficiency bill any time up to midnight to-night, if the House is not in session.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to couple with that request a reservation of all points of order on the bill when reported.

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. This bill will be reported to-night before 12 o'clock and then printed——

Mr. MADDEN. It will be reported this afternoon before adjournment, if the House does not adjourn too soon.

Mr. BLANTON. But the point I am making is this: Does not the gentleman from Illinois, who used to work hard on these bills and who used to want to study a copy of them before they were debated, when he was not the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, think the membership of the House ought to have access to such bills before they are called up for debate? This bill will be called up to-morrow for debate.

Mr. MADDEN. For general debate, but not for consideration otherwise.

Mr. BLANTON. There will not be any extensive debate on it?

Mr. MADDEN. And we will report it before the House adjourns, if the House does not adjourn too soon.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any way of getting copies of the bill now?

Mr. MADDEN. No; because we have not passed on it.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object. But these bills should be printed and should be available to Members for at least one day before they are called up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk.

[See Senate proceedings for message of the President, page 103.]

On motion of Mr. TILSON, the message was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

STATUE OF ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 3, which I send to the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 3

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the statue of Alexander H. Stephens, presented by the State of Georgia, to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his distinguished humanitarian service.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, is this the usual resolution which is always presented under similar circumstances when a statue is to be placed in the Hall?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will state to the gentleman from New York this is in the usual form.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, only for the purpose of asking a question, I reserve the right to object. There is in the basement of this Capitol the statue of three renowned women of America, which was formally accepted, as I distinctly remember, by a former Speaker of this House, Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT, for I heard his eloquent speech of acceptance, and I am wondering why it is not taken out of the dusty basement and given some suitable place in this Capitol.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is the gentleman addressing his question to me or to the Speaker?

Mr. BLANTON. I am addressing the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman is addressing the question to me, I can not answer it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think I can tell the gentleman why.

Mr. BLANTON. Why is it not given a proper placement?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Statuary Hall is set aside especially for the use of the States. Only the States are permitted to send statues there. The statue to which the gentleman refers was not presented by a State, but by a private organization. I think that is the explanation, although I am not absolutely sure.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the Democratic leader and to the Republican leader that in this tremendous building there ought to be some suitable place found for this very important statue other than the dusty basement of this building. I hope the majority leader and the minority leader will find some way to properly place the statue before the session ends.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Texas does not want us to build a place for it?

Mr. BLANTON. There are plenty of proper places in this Capitol for it already, if the Congress will only choose one and officially designate it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADMIRAL MAGRUDER

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House that I may insert in the RECORD the reply of the Government made through the Navy Department on some criticisms made by Admiral Magruder. This statement includes the criticisms made by Admiral Magruder as well as the reply thereto. The reason that I ask to have it inserted—and it is the only request that I have made of the kind for 25 years—is that I think it is well that the membership of the House should be acquainted with what the controversy is about. The matter may arise hereafter, and I ask permission to insert it in the RECORD so that gentlemen may have an opportunity to read it.

Mr. TILSON. How large a document is it?

Mr. BUTLER. It is longer than I would have made it if I had had the preparation of it—it is 15 or 20 pages.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be well to have it printed as a separate document and not place it in the RECORD?

Mr. BUTLER. I think it ought to be printed in the RECORD so that Members may read it. I did not write it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does it contain all of Admiral Magruder's statement?

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that it does. If Admiral Magruder has any economies in mind we propose to hear them.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is one of the fairest men in the House. Does he think it fair to publish the criticisms of the Secretary of the Navy without at the same time giving Admiral Magruder's side of it?

Mr. BUTLER. It is all here.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I disagree with the gentleman about that. I have read Secretary Wilbur's censure of Admiral Magruder published in the press, and it only takes up certain parts of the statements of Admiral Magruder and feebly attempts to answer them.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall object unless all of Admiral Magruder's statements go in with it. If they go in together, I shall not object to printing same either in the RECORD or as a public document.

Mr. BUTLER. It is all in here.

Mr. BLANTON. I object for the present.

Mr. BLANTON subsequently withdrew his objection and Mr. BLACK of Texas renewed it.

JOEL GRAYSON

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 41

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret of the death of Joel Grayson, special employee in the document room of the House of Representatives, which occurred at his home in Fairfax County, Va., on November 1, 1927, and it now records its appreciation of his able, loyal, and useful service to the House during the long period of 52 years, in which he filled various positions so acceptably as to win the distinction of being mentioned by name in legislation enacted by the Fifty-sixth Congress and in similar legislation enacted by every subsequent Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES T. BEGG

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech made in my home city of Chicago by my colleague, Hon. JAMES T. BEGG, of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. JAMES T. BEGG before the Executives' Club of Chicago, Ill., Friday, September 30, 1927:

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS AND THEIR EFFECT ON BUSINESS

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, members of the Executives' Club of Chicago, it has been my privilege to have a good many different types of introductions, and I have learned to wait and see what the chairman would say about me before even thinking what I might say in reply, and I will say, Mr. Chairman, you are a real toastmaster and presenter of a speaker.

I am indeed happy to be privileged to come to Chicago to-day and address your group, for various reasons, not least of which is that it furnished me a most excellent excuse and opportunity to visit my old friend, your member, and one of your directors, Lucius Wilson, as well as a number of other good friends, and my colleague, CARL R. CHINDBLOM.

A GREAT PROBLEM AHEAD OF US

I am to talk to you this afternoon for a few minutes on the foreign policy of the United States and its effect on business. I will say to you business men very frankly that it is my humble judgment that within the next 10 or 15 years the American business man will see the keenest competition he ever imagined anybody could see and survive. Now, we produce in America to-day one and one-fourth times as much as we can consume. When we take production en masse that statement is true. Stated in another way, the man-power production in America is one and one-fourth times the man-power consumption.

That being true, there is only one of three ways for America to go—either produce less, consume more, or find a market for the surplus. Let us examine each of those propositions very briefly. Can America produce less with safety to herself? You may be surprised, possibly not, but last spring I came in contact with one of my friends, the editorial writer of one of the best and biggest newspapers in the United States, who said, "Jim, your theory of foreign commerce is bound to run the United States into trouble." I said to him, "Well, what would you do?" His reply was this: "I have about concluded the wisest policy for America would be to produce only that which we can consume and build a tariff wall around us high enough to keep everything out of America that is or might be produced here." Well, being an advocate of a high protective tariff, you might think that policy would have somewhat of an appeal to me, but I was astounded to find that a man in a position of such importance and influence as this gentleman is would advocate such a doctrine, and I asked him where he got the idea. His reply to me was, the head of the political-science department in one of our best schools in America was teaching that kind of economic-political theory to his students—your boy and mine.

Well, I don't know how you feel on that kind of a policy. So far as I am personally concerned, I am unalterably opposed to a national policy that aims self-preservation alone. I would hate to think, gentlemen, that the only purpose of my life was to earn enough money to buy food, clothing, and shelter for myself and my family. I would hate much worse to think that the only purpose of America was to make a living for the American citizenship and provide shelter and clothing for them. I believe there is a work to be done by America in the world. Whether or not she will accept the responsibility for that work, I can not say, but I will say this: In my judgment, the only way that America can survive as she is to-day is to have a responsibility broader than the confines of her own boundary lines. [Applause.]

RESULTS OF CURTAILING PRODUCTION

Now, let us see what would happen were we to undertake to produce only just what we consume. If we have a surplus of 25 per cent, then to reduce production to meet the consumption it would be absolutely necessary to keep one-fourth the people idle all the time or all the people idle one-fourth of the time. Either one of those methods would mean an earning power in America of 25 per cent less. That would mean a spending power or a buying power 25 per cent less, which of itself would reduce the standard of living in America by about 25 per cent. And there is not a man or woman in our great country who would be advocating that kind of a procedure for the next 10 or 20 years in America. There is no one who says the standard of living in America is too high.

But if you reduce the earning power in America you must reduce the buying power, and the standard of living must go down.

CAN CONSUMPTION BE INCREASED?

Now, then, if we can not with safety in America adopt the policy of restricted production to meet the demands of the American people, we will discard that idea and go to the other. Is it possible in this country to consume more, to take up the slack between production and consumption? Well, having been privileged to travel about the United States, in every State but two, coming in rather intimate contact with the American people, I am frank to say to you that I do not believe it is possible to increase the consumption of foodstuffs any in America. Seeing you here as I do, I feel sure of it. In other words, I believe America is just as well fed as it is possible to be fed. Why, gentlemen, I will go so far as to say there is no plausible reason why any able-bodied man in this country needs to go to bed to-night hungry. You can not make that statement about any other country in the world. I have seen half the peoples of the world, and I know whereof I speak. It is not hearsay, and I didn't read it out of a book.

Again, I think the American people can not consume more in the way of wearing apparel. I think we have reached almost the maximum in consumption along that line. I am well aware, if this were an audience made up of ladies, I would never dare make that kind of a statement, because I doubt if there is a lady living that would not admit that she could consume more clothing than her husband furnishes, but on the whole, I think, the average American is as well dressed as any people desire to be dressed.

I remember as a lad out on the farm, when I went into the city, or the village, the chances were about 10 to 1 that some boy in the city or myself would end the day with a black eye, because I was taunted with the comment, "You are a rube," or a country-jake, or something of that kind. Those terms have gone out of the vocabularies of the young folks to-day. Why were they applied to the country boy and the son of the laboring man 25 years ago? Simply because our clothing was of a coarser quality than that worn by the children of the better-fixed people. Not so to-day. I will challenge any man in this room to go into any schoolroom outside of your neighborhood in your own fair city this afternoon, and walk down the aisle of that school, put your hand on the desk of a boy or a girl, and say, "Your father is a banker," or "Your father is a farmer," or "Your father is a laboring man in the factory." You can't do it, because the masses and the classes in America dress alike. And again I say, America is the only spot in the world where that statement will hold true.

I think I am safe when I say to you that the occupants of the charitable institutions in this country, the poorhouses, are better fed, better housed, and better clothed than the masses of the people in any other country in all the world save two or three little nations.

If I am right in that statement, then let me propound to you a question: Whenever the rest of the world learns the art of mass production like we know it, how do you expect to sell your surplus in competition with their surplus, or with the same article in the rest of the world, when your surplus was manufactured by labor receiving from five to eight to ten dollars a day and your competitors' product was manufactured with labor a maximum wage of which is $2.56 a day? In other words, how can we maintain the standard of living on the plane we now have it and sell a surplus to the rest of a world that lives on a plane away beneath America's?

Let me put the question in another way. Of the 35,000,000, approximately, American laboring people, less than 5,000,000 live in homes without modern conveniences—water and toilet, electric lights, etc. I will challenge any man, if he will stay out of the Dominion of Canada, New Zealand, Sweden, Denmark, and Switzerland, to find me a laboring man that lives in a house with any modern conveniences. I ask you, how are you going to meet competition in 10 or 20 years, when the rest of the world learns the art of mass production?

Oh, you say, they won't. I say they will. American business is going to foreign countries to-day. Some of it is even going where it can hire able-bodied labor for from 8 to 15 cents a day for 10 hours. And they are manufacturing products. What for? Not to bring into America and sell to America, but to meet competition in the rest of the world with the articles produced by cheap labor.

In the automotive industry outside the United States it takes three men to put one automobile into the hands of the ultimate consumer. in the United States one man in the automotive trade puts 10 automobiles into the hands of the ultimate consumer. If you believe the rest of the world won't learn how to teach the one man and equip him with machinery to put the 10 automobiles, you do not have the same confidence in the American industrialist that I have. He is going to the rest of the world and building his industry. So I do not see any relief there.

RAISING LIVING STANDARDS STILL HIGHER

There is one other way. Can we add any more of the list of luxuries to the list of necessities? Sixty per cent of the items that 15 years ago were on the luxury list are now on the necessity list. Dare we go any further and speed up consumption in that direction? Traveling about the country, as I have done, I make it a point to ask the business man, wherever I meet him, "How is business?" For the past eight months I have been met quite too frequently with this reply: "Well, business in my line is slow." I ask you, what made it slow? The political laws, the economic laws, the economic conditions are even better in the world than 16 or 18 months ago. Then, why has American business slowed up, if it has? Well, I have a theory that I will give you by way of illustration.

Let us assume that I am the earning power for all America. In other words, on Saturday night this week there will be in my pay envelope the mass wage of America. I would have approximately $1,000,000,000. If that were true, what might I buy with my billion dollars? Why, I can buy $52,000,000,000 worth of merchandise, anything from a house and lot to the highest luxury that you can find on the list. If I buy $52,000,000,000 worth with my $1,000,000,000 of earnings, of course industry is bound to spurt up to satisfy the demands for this week's purchases. Yet the maximum that I can pay for, is my week's earning power, or $1,000,000,000. The thing I am trying to say to you is, that we have gone as far as we dare go, with safety to American business, in the expansion of credit, or the installment plan of buying.

We must have an elastic credit in America, which means we must have some installment buying. That same theory, carried to an excess, will bring ruin as truly as it came on agriculture. Why, that's all that was the matter with agriculture. Speculative expansion of credit was all at once curtailed by the Government, or a Government agency, and the financial depression for agriculture came on. We have not entirely eliminated it yet, and that class of people are demanding compensation for their losses out of the Federal Treasury, and they are basing that demand solely on the grounds that a governmental agency set the peg on the expansion of credit.

Now, the Government can not fix the point at which credit shall stop. Who will? It must be done by the combined thinking of American business, if done at all, before there is a financial breakdown in the scheme of business. It is not safe to experiment in that direction any more. In other words, I do not believe it is possible in America to very materially increase the consumption of American products, take them as a whole. That is not pessimism. It is pride. It is boasting of his superior condition to that of the rest of the world.

That being true, we are face to face with the only alternative left—to find a market outside the territory of the United States, and if the market is not there, create a market by and through the leadership of the United States, by elevating the standard of living of other people so that their demands will be increased and there will be our market. [Applause.]

CONSUMING POSSIBILITIES OF CHINA

To illustrate: I visited China a couple of years ago. Nobody knows how many people are over there, but the estimate runs from 500,000,000 to 700,000,000. Now, if there are 500,000,000 of them, I have no hesitancy at all in saying that there are 450,000,000 of them go to bed every night of their lives hungry. If through the wise, intelligent leadership of America we could restore some kind of a stable government in China and thereby increase the demands of the citizenship just for the commonest kind of necessities of life, so that they could go to bed at night satisfied as to hunger alone, instead of there being a surplus of agricultural products in the world, there would be an actual shortage to-day in every kind of a foodstuff that is grown.

Suppose that were possible. You say, "Well, that is a theory you are talking about. You are idealistic." No; I am not. We shot the commerce of western civilization right out of the mouth of an American cannon into Japan, and Japan to-day, per capita, consumes more of the products of western civilization, by a thousand times, than does China. But supposing we could elevate the standard of living in China through our leadership and help to the point where we could get those people off of wooden cleats, off of bare feet, elevate them in their standard of living to the point where they would require just a single pair of coarse shoes per annum, what kind of a stimulant would it be to the agriculture of the world to produce the hides to manufacture 500,000,000 additional pairs of shoes annually. Would it be any stimulant to commerce to carry the raw and the finished products to and fro? Would it be any inspiration to industry to manufacture not only the machinery with which to make the finished product, but the finished product itself?

I think without consuming too much time you get what I mean. The United States has an opportunity through a wise, aggressive, and firm but fair foreign policy to help elevate the standard of living of the rest of the world, and thereby furnish America with a market for all she can produce, even under competition.

I can not but make the statement that there is more unrest in the world to-day, so far as stability of government is concerned, than was present during the World War. Each of those countries will need an adjustment, and the attitude taken by America toward the adjustment that must be made in every instance will have more to do with the welfare of the individual American 10 years from to-day than any other single question that confronts us.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICIES

Now, with that statement made rather badly, and not discussed at all, I want to call your attention to America. Last spring just before Congress adjourned we began to get letters and telegrams—myself and my colleagues. Mine were all of this tenor: "Please, Congressman Begg, do everything you can to keep the United States from going to war with Nicaragua." Why, there never was a bigger hoax foisted on an innocent people than that. We could not go to war with Nicaragua if we wanted to. The soldiery in Chicago alone, if sent down there, equipped and supported by the United States Government, would conquer the whole Nicaraguan country in, perhaps, 90 days, or 6 months at the most; so it was an absolute impossibility for the United States to go to war with Nicaragua.

Then what was all the fuss about? Why, we sent a thousand marines down there. What for? To protect American lives, threatened by the revolutions that were going on, each party seeking control of the Government. American, English, and Italian people appealed to the Government of the United States for protection of lives and property. You notice I do not soft pedal the property. Why, gentlemen, if the sovereignty of my United States does not mean protection for my property wherever I am in the world, there is no sovereignty. The sovereignty of my great State of Ohio will protect my property, whether I am in Ohio or China, and the sovereignty of the State of Illinois guarantees you protection to your property.

Now, unless the sovereignty of the United States extends beyond the boundary line, where is there sovereignty? The littlest, tiniest nation in the world, and incidentally, about the youngest, Latvia—I dare say not 2 per cent of the people in this audience could even name the countries around it, it is so new and so unimportant in the scheme of things nationally—the sovereignty of Latvia goes far enough, so that if you were to injure by accident a national of that little country, in Chicago, next winter some Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Congress would receive a recommendation from the President of the United States that we pay to the heirs, if the man were killed—if not, to him direct—a specified sum of money. Who fixes the amount? Why, the Government of Latvia represents to the United States that "One of our nationals was damaged to that amount," and in my nine years experience on the Foreign Affairs Committee, I have yet to hear a single man, either on the committee or in the Congress question the wisdom of the amount of money that was demanded by any country in the world for injury received by one of her nationals.

Well, if a little country like Latvia has a sovereignty that goes beyond its boundary, there must be something radically wrong with the thinking in America that begins to criticize the United States for insisting that her sovereignty extends wherever her nationals happen to be. [Applause.] Lest I be misunderstood, let me say the critics were not all Democrats by a long sight; some of the worst were on my own political side of the fence.

But let us reason this out fairly. I almost forgot, I do frequently forget, to mention the fact that we had marines down in Nicaragua for 20 years almost, until 1925, when Mr. Harding brought them out, because the Central American countries agreed to quit having revolutions. The customary way of holding an election in Central America was to have a revolution. Of course, if you can kill off the fellow in power, then you can be the head of the government. One of the representatives of a Central American government for 18 years told me that every ancestor he had died with his boots on at election time. I sometimes think, to arouse the spirit of responsibility among the electorate in America, evidenced by the small percentage of those going to the polls and voting, that it might be a good thing perhaps in America to occasionally have a revolution about election time to stir up a little interest. [Laughter.] But President Harding thought it was a bad thing. He got them to agree not to do it; then one of them that signed the agreement, General Chammora, went right home and did it. We sent the marines out, but we brought them back.

The critics would say, "The United States is getting imperialistic. We want to grab off territory. We are imposing on a little nation." And repeatedly they would say, "Give us the name of a single man that lost his life." Well, let's suppose a little riot started out in one end of Chicago and kept getting worse. You telephone down to the police station and say, "There is a riot started out here, it has been going on about an hour and doesn't seem to be breaking up." What would you say to the officer if he would ask you this question: "Has anybody been hurt or killed yet?" "No; but we are afraid they will be." "Has any property been destroyed?" "No; not yet; but we are afraid it will be." What would you say if he would tell you, "We are sorry, but we can not send the police until somebody has been killed or some property has been destroyed"?

ORIGIN OF MONROE DOCTRINE

Now, gentlemen, that was exactly the position taken by the critics toward sending the marines, or the international police, down to Nicaragua to protect life and property. There is another angle to it and let's hurry over this: In 1815 the crowned heads of Europe became alarmed at the spread of democracy. Three of them got together and formed what was known as the holy alliance, the purpose of which was to restore the crown on the throne in Spain, and then Spain, to pay for that restoration, was to come over into the Central and South American republics and set up in their stead monarchies. About 1823 the holy alliance had performed its part of the bargain and Spain was about ready to perform her part, namely, to stop the creation of republics in America and set up in their stead monarchies. Thank God, we had a man in the President's chair that had a spinal column that was made out of bone instead of gristle, by the name of Monroe, and when he sent his message to Congress that winter he made a little speech to the rest of the world, not to the Congress, not to the American people. And here is what he said, in our language: "Any attempt by any European country to interfere with the destiny of any American will be interpreted by the United States as an unfriendly act."

Now, gentlemen, whether you know it or not, that is exactly the language used by one nation to another preceding a declaration of war in case the nation spoken to does the thing she is told not to do. Wasn't it peculiar that James Monroe had the courage to speak to all Europe combined, when the population of this country was perhaps only four and a half or five million American citizens? But Europe respected it. Monroe didn't ask for any more men for the Army or Navy or Marine Corps. He didn't ask for enlistment or another single sailor. He didn't ask for a single nickel additional for national defense; yet his pronouncement, the Monroe doctrine, was respected by all Europe, and it is my judgment it was respected because Europe heard the silent support of America.

I will say to you, gentlemen, there is not anything that is heard as distinctly in any nation or country when there is a delicate question up between this country and that as the silence of the American people. Under Grover Cleveland England, the mistress of the seas, undertook to interfere just a little bit in a little matter over in this country that she thought was her business. Put baldly and in plain English, Cleveland said to England, "Stay on your own side of the Atlantic in your interfering in the affairs of nations." England, the mistress of the seas! Cleveland, with a fleet not even a good fleet of tubs, spoke to the sea king and was respected and obeyed. Why? Simply because again Grover Cleveland had the silent support of about seventy-five or eighty million American citizens.

Then under Theodore Roosevelt Germany, the nation that builded the biggest war machine that any single nation ever built, sent part of her fleet down into Venezuelan waters on a boundary dispute, as a pretext, and in our language Roosevelt said—of course, he wouldn't say it quite as raw as I am saying it—in our language he said to the German ambassador, "We will give you just 24 hours to withdraw your fleet from the Venezuelan harbor." The German ambassador said, "Mr. President, it is physically impossible to do that."

What did Roosevelt say in reply? What would Cleveland have said in reply? What would James Monroe have said in reply? Well, he might have said, "If you can't do it in 24 hours, think it over and come back in a few days and let me know how soon you can do it." That wasn't Roosevelt's or Cleveland's or Monroe's way of talking. Here is what Roosevelt said in substance: "Unless the German Fleet is on its way out of the harbor in 24 hours the American Fleet will be on its way in." And what happened? Why, the German Fleet was on its way out. There was the biggest war machine that any single nation ever put together. Roosevelt said of it just a few years later, "Give me that kind of an armed troop, that many trained men, and I can conquer the world." Yet Roosevelt, with an army of less than 125,000, dared reiterate and restate the Monroe doctrine that had been stated by Cleveland and Monroe, and he was respected by that war machine. Why? Because, at the time of an international crisis, Roosevelt had 100,000,000 American souls that spoke to the world by their silence.

But this spring, in the puny little Nicaraguan affair, that any company of militia in a county in the United States could handle, the voice of the critic and of the demagogue was heard over in Europe so plainly that Great Britain said to us this year—and I will say to you this is not a proud thing to tell—Great Britain said to us this year, "If you don't want to protect the English nationals in Nicaragua, we will dispatch a man-of-war, fully armed and fully equipped," and it gave its name, "down into the Caribbean waters and we will protect our own."

Why, gentlemen, I will leave it to you, I don't care how bitterly partisan you may be, we either in honor were compelled to say to the nationals of the world, "We will protect yours in Nicaragua," or "You may protect your own." In other words, we were face to face with upholding the Monroe doctrine, a hundred years old, practically, or else abandoning it; and, so far as I am concerned, if the time comes to abandon the Monroe doctrine, I propose to abandon it honorably, like gentlemen, and with our heads up. We chose to maintain the Monroe doctrine. We sent the marines. Why? If we had not, if we had said, "We won't, and you can't," we would have been guilty of murder every time a national of any other country in the world had been killed.

Supposing, instead of saying, "We will protect your nationals," we had said, "You may," what would have happened? England did threaten to send her men-of-war. She would have sent them if we had granted the permission. The rattle of the anchor chain of the English men-of-war would not have been stilled before, 200 yards on the side of her, would have been an Italian man-of-war throwing out anchor, and that anchor would never have touched the bottom of the Caribbean Sea before there would have been a French man-of-war 200 yards over on the other side of her, and none of the three would have been settled in their berth before there would have been a Jap man-of-war lined up right alongside of her.

Gentlemen, to see the war powers of the world congregated in a harbor is a spectacularly beautiful sight. I have seen it. But when the war powers of the world congregate in any harbor, each being sent there to protect his own interests, there is a greater possibility of starting war than started the World War in 1914.

CONTROL OF PANAMA CANAL

Then, again, there is a bigger prize down in that country for which to fight than was the contemplated prize of the World War. What is it, you say? Why, it is the Panama Canal, and the control of the only other available route, the Nicaraguan Canal, the bottle neck through which the commerce of the world between the Atlantic and the Pacific must flow, certainly the bottle neck through which the major portion of the commerce for the Orient will flow when—you understand, I do not say "if" I say "when"—China adopts the western civilization and establishes a permanent government in a few years.

We control the Panama Canal. We control the only other available route, the Nicaraguan, and so far as I am concerned personally, what little influence I may be able to exercise, either in public or private life, the United States is the only nation that will have any influence north of the Panama Canal on any country that happens to intervene. [Applause.] And it seems to me that is the only way of maintaining the standard of life in America on the high plane that we now have it. If the United States will adopt, if the people of the country will adopt, a foreign policy along the lines I have described, firm and aggressive, but fair to the other nations—and we have never been unfair in our dealings—and have that foreign policy a permanent policy, that policy shall be too big and too sacred to be demagogued by any politician seeking his own aggrandizement.

It ought to be the policy of America, the policy of a Democratic administration and of a Republican administration, on foreign questions. Certainly the destiny of America is too sacred to be swayed and switched to meet the fortunes of political parties.

Now, if we will do that, it is my prophecy that the United States will emerge out of every one of these international complications that now exist in the world with all the honor and glory necessary to satisfy the cravings of the most enthusiastic, patriotic, and loyal American, and, what I think is of more importance, with the confidence and the respect of the nations with which we have dealings. Nothing more than that has any man a right to demand of his country. Nothing less than that ought to satisfy the least of us. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE HOOVER

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by Secretary Hoover in St. Louis on the development of Mid-West waterways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend remarks in the RECORD I present the following address by Hon. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, before the Mississippi Valley Association at St. Louis, Mo., Monday evening, November 14, 1927:

MID-WEST WATERWAYS

Secretary HOOVER. In the past three years I have addressed many of you in support of further development of our inland waterways. In fact, the Secretary of Commerce is enjoined by the organic act creating that office to foster and promote the development of transportation. It is a subject that can interest only the serious minded, for any contribution to public thought must be by economic reasoning, not by oratory.

I am concerned with this improvement because it will contribute to the wealth and economic progress of every section of the Union. It will contribute to the unity of the Nation. It is of concern to every one of our millions of farms and homes. Your association, representing all parts of the Mid West, has been long devoted to the promotion of flood control and inland waterways; it has a record of great accomplishment. But the work is far from complete, and your work and mine requires that we should formulate and support plans not only for to-morrow but with vision of the distant future, for the day is here when we must look to the welfare of not alone 115,000,000 Americans of our generation, but we have a responsibility toward the 150,000,000 Americans who will be living in our children.

MISSISSIPPI FLOOD CONTROL

The most important event in our national life during the past year has been one which bears directly upon the development and control of our great rivers; that is, the Mississippi flood. Sad and heart-rending as it has been in its human aspects, severe and discouraging as have been the economic losses, it at least serves to bring home to the American people the increasing dangers to a growing population which lurk in our great streams if they be not adequately controlled.

I had the honor to be chosen by President Coolidge to organize and direct the relief activities which were supported so generously by our Government and the people at large through the Red Cross. No man could occupy that responsibility and have witnessed its scenes without being deeply moved to the human necessity of immediate and final prevention of it ever recurring again.

I have little need to dwell upon the causes of the great flood and its destruction. But there is an aspect of the flood that has, perhaps, not been sufficiently emphasized. The destructivity of this flood was partly due to the rapidly increasing settlement of the flood area. This increase will continue and such dangers to our country will increase as years go on unless we establish adequate controls. The great Delta of the Mississippi River, which in reality extends from Cairo to the Gulf, has been for untold centuries the spillway for our interior rivers. They spread their annual floods over these richest of alluvial lands for a thousand miles long and from 20 to 150 miles wide. With the pressure of population our people have, more especially in the past quarter of a century, invaded the flood region. With courage and resolution they have overcome the swamp and forest; they have converted it into homes and productive farms. And in so doing they have of necessity crowded out the annual floods with peace until finally they have forced the river in flood time to confine itself to its own channel.

I need not recount to you that with the unprecedented volume of water of this year these barriers crumpled up and the river spread itself again over its old flood area. Some 750,000 of our people were compelled to flee their homes in jeopardy of their lives. Damage to their farms and villages amounted to hundreds of millions.

Such a flood 25 years ago would have wrought far less destruction simply because there were fewer people and less property in its track. If we look into the future but a quarter of a century, we can envisage even far greater dangers than those past. We may not have so great a flood again for many years to come. But the richness of these soils and the pressure of our growing people will some day see five or ten million of them settled under these levees. No one can contemplate these millions of our fellow citizens living in such jeopardy without adequate and final protection.

I believe the whole of the United States is unanimous in that we must undertake such engineering works as will give security, not only now but for the future. Our people have arrived at this conclusion because of their warm sympathy for the welfare of their fellow citizens. But, viewed from the more narrow point of view, the destruction of property is the loss of the entire Nation—it is not solely the loss of the individual sufferers. The loss of several millions of acres of crops in this flood deprived the American people of just that much goods which they might have otherwise consumed or exported, and again, every worker and every farmer in our country to some degree was a loser through the decreased buying power of flood sufferers themselves. Every investor in railways and industry of the South lost something.

Our able engineering staff under the leadership of General Jadwin will in a few weeks have consummated their plans by which these floods can be controlled. And it devolves upon my colleague and your capable townsman, Secretary Davis, to present them to Congress as the basis for legislation.

I am confident of the outcome that we shall as a Nation within the next few months have taken such action as will not only give assurance of safety to the whole of our fellow citizens in the flood territory, but that will give such security as will guarantee the continued development of this great region.

INLAND WATERWAYS

But in our necessity to remake and energetically construct such flood control works as will guarantee protection against these calamities, we must not be diverted from our march to the improvement of our inland waterways. That is as important to the suffering flood States as it is to our people elsewhere. Indeed, we have made great progress in the past year in this great improvement of our national estate, both in actual construction and in advancement of public support.

It is perhaps unnecessary to recount that every great national development in transportation must pass through many stages. There must be a situation to be remedied, there must be compelling cause for action; there must be a determination of the remedies that are available; there must be a definite plan conceived; the works must be constructed; and finally they must be used.

THE SITUATION TO REMEDY

The urgency of the situation to be remedied to a large degree grows from the economic shifts due to the war, which have brought a new setting to all our mid-continent. The necessarily large advance in our railroad rates as a result of higher wages and cost of materials since the war serves to set a row of tollgates around the Middle West. There is thus a charge, new with the war, against all goods coming into the Mid West and all goods going out. It is not as if all parts of the country and all parts of the world had been placed under a similar tax, for that is not the case.

You will find that ocean rates have returned to a pre-war basis, and thus the folks of seaboard countries do not pay these additional tolls to and from market, and therefore they have to-day a greatly increased competitive advantage over their fellows in the interior. This, together with the completion of the Panama Canal, the full effect of which was not evident until after the war, all combine to distort the economic setting of this whole Mid West.

Mid-west agriculture and mid-west industry have been placed in a new relationship to different parts of our country and to the world markets as a whole. If we would restore these former relationships we must find fundamentally cheaper transportation for our grain and bulk commodities which we export and the raw materials which we import into the Mid West.

I can possibly make this problem of economic shifts more clear by example: A great part of the agriculture which competes with our farmers lies to a considerable degree in Argentina, Australia, eastern Europe, and India. Those agricultural areas are all nearer to seaboard and their ocean rates to the common markets remain the same as pre-war, while our rail rates to seaboard on wheat, for instance, have increased about 8 to 18 cents per bushel. Therefore foreign farmers reach European markets at a less cost in proportion to pre-war than can our mid-west American farmer. In actual figures, the competing farmers from the Argentine, for instance, have felt an increase in rates of only 2 cents per bushel.

I believe there is general agreement that the cost of transportation is a deduction from the price the farmer receives at the world's markets, and besides that the price at which he realizes his surplus in foreign seaboard markets makes the price of his whole product at home, so that the effect of increased transportation rates to these markets is far greater than the bare amount as applied to exports only.

It is an enormous sum when applied to our crops and is one of the contributing causes of the farmer's postwar difficulties. It is not all the farm problem, but it is a substantial part.

While the Panama Canal has carried great benefits to our people, we can not ignore the fact that it has also contributed to distort the competitive relationships of the Mid West and our seaboard business and industry. It has drawn the east and west seaboards much closer together by greatly decreasing transportion costs and therefore tends to draw an area of Pacific's business formerly enjoyed by the Mid West toward the Atlantic States. We can roughly visualize the combined effect of the canal and higher rail rates if we set up a new measuring unit in the shape of the number of cents which it takes to carry a ton of staple goods at present rates. Using that measuring rod and taking the cheapest routes, we find that before the war New York was 1,904 cents away from San Francisco, while now it is only 1,680 cents away. But a given mid-west point, which was 2,600 cents away from the Pacific coast before the war, is to-day 3,114 cents away. In effect, this mid-west point has moved 514 cents away from the Pacific coast, while New York has moved 224 closer to the Pacific coast. A similar calculation will show that in the same period the mid-west point has moved 694 cents away from the markets of the Atlantic seaboard and South America.

All this causes certain types of mid-west business to migrate to seaboard. It steadily tends to establish manufacture nearer to seaboard and farther from the heart of agriculture, to the mutual disadvantage of both. It likewise has a tendency to limit the area of mid-west wholesale distribution. Individual merchants and manufacturers in the interior can give you many instances of it all.

From all this serious shift in economic currents in its effect on agriculture and upon business we surely have something worthy of our best effort in remedy. And remedy lies, as I have said, in finding cheaper transportation in bulk products of agriculture and in raw materials.

THE REMEDY

With the higher cost of labor and materials, we can not expect any consequential reduction in our railroad rates without ruin to that vital circulating system. Our railways have reached the highest efficiency in their history and we must maintain them in that condition. We can not close the Panama Canal, nor can we raise Atlantic Ocean and other sea rates, because the standards of living in the rest of the world, unlike our own, have not increased over pre-war, and therefore the cost of operating foreign overseas shipping is not far from a pre-war basis.

In any examination of our country for remedy we have naturally turned to a consideration of the magnificent natural waterways which Providence has blessed us with. It is therefore our conception that we should deepen our rivers to permit modern barge transportation, deepen the outlet to the Great Lakes to permit ocean-going shipping, and to connect them all together into a definite transportation system.

THE PLAN

Your association has for long years steadily fostered and forwarded the development of inland waterways. But the national mind perhaps, until in the past two or three years, has conceived waterway development as local projects of some immediate near-by improvement, instead of in the wide vision of a comprehensive system of 12,000 miles of connected inland-water transportation reaching from the Gulf to the northern frontiers and from the Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean.

The plan can be simply stated:

It is to deepen the 9,000 miles of the Mississippi and its tributaries to minimum depths of 6 to 9 feet so as to permit modern barge service; that is, the Mississippi system.

The construction of the St. Lawrence shipway from the Lakes to the Atlantic, thus opening every lake port to the vessels of the world over 3,000 miles of deep waterways—the Great Lakes system.

There are other important waterway improvements of less size which bear directly and indirectly upon the Mid West. The stabilization of lake levels and deepening of the channels so as to permit full ship loading within the Lakes, the intracoastal waterways, and the continuous development of our harbors are all works which must go forward some time, but are not our particular subject to-night.

During the last year we have made great steps in progress of these plans and in the consummation of some of them. Congress has authorized the remaining unfinished links in the Mississippi system. It has increased appropriations available to $20,000,000 per year for their execution. If these appropriations continue we should see the improved upper Ohio linked with the lower Mississippi in another two years. We should see the Missouri steadily deepened to Kansas City and as far above as traffic warrants. Already barge navigation has begun upon the upper Mississippi to St. Paul and Minneapolis. I am in hopes that in not more than five years we shall see Chicago connected to the Mississippi and thereby with the Gulf by a 9-foot channel. By these works and the gradual improvement of channels up the other tributaries as traffic warrants, we shall at last replace a series of disconnected segments of river improvements into a great transportation system.

Curiously enough, I find that some of the press in outlying parts of the country still have the lingering notion that we are trying to restore the romantic steamboatin' days, with gay river steamers whistling down the reaches, with possible Mark Twains aboard. I am not adverse to romance when it can be had without cost to the taxpayers. What we are trying to do lacks that color but carries much more freight. What we want is to deepen our streams so that they become unfailing channels for flocks of steel barges, shepherded by puffing tugs. It lacks splendor and the glorious adventure of the olden days, but each flock will carry at a single trip from 4,000 to 16,000 tons more, say, than 50 old-fashioned packet boats or more than 5 modern freight trains. It is no doubt the drab toil of modern commerce, but in this bulk and in this mobility of units which can be sent to different destinations do we realize modern river transportation and modern mass handling of commodities on our inland water.

Two years ago while speaking upon this subject at Kansas City I was able to promise that this traffic and these benefits would flow as soon as we had connected up the segments of this great Mississippi system. But in so short a time as two years the demands upon even the disconnected segments have grown beyond the capacity of our equipment and already we begin to see a complete confirmation of our assurances. Last year over 10,000,000 tons of commodities moved on the lower Mississippi and nearly 20,000,000 tons upon the Ohio. The present gap in the connection of these great segments is just as if a stretch of narrow-gauge line were introduced into the New York Central main line.

Recent delegations of shippers to Washington showed that there are hundreds of thousands of tons more unable to move because of insufficient equipment on the river; and we must bear in mind that we have not yet felt the effect of the fully developed system for such great centers as Kansas City, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Louisville, and their hinterlands are not yet connected either with each other or with St. Louis, Memphis, and New Orleans.

This should settle once and for all the contention of our critics that there was no demand in goods to be moved upon the rivers.

A component part of our inland system is the Great Lakes. In them we have the mightiest inland waterway given to any continent. They bore last year over 115,000,000 tons of traffic.

But the full influence of the Great Lakes system in remedy to the economic difficulties of the Mid West is dependent on the deepening of the channel of the St. Lawrence River to permit deep-sea shipping from the Great Lakes into every port of the world. The consummation of such an undertaking would represent the final step in 150 years of battle for the removal of barriers in this great waterway to the Mid West. It would give an effective outlet for 18 of our States to the North Atlantic.

Since I spoke before your body on the last occasion the joint board of engineers have submitted to their two Governments their report upon this work. Their conclusions were that this route is the most beneficial and efficient one by large margins, the cheapest to build and operate. In accord with the compelling interpretation of the facts, our American commission, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has recommended that its construction be undertaken.

Some months ago we requested the Canadian Government to enter these negotiations. However intricate the questions may be which are involved in these international relations, I am confident that they can be solved upon the ample foundations of broad, mutual interest and good will which have signaled our two nations since our birth. We have for a century cooperated with each other in constant improvement of this great highway. It has been part of our joint endeavor in the development of the new civilization on this continent. This final step is a task worthy of the strength and purpose of the two sister countries who have in two centuries already overcome countless obstacles in implanting the most helpful civilization of history.

THE OPPOSITION TO WATERWAY DEVELOPMENT

You will find three main schools of opponents of the vigorous development of our water transportation: First, those who doubt that it will yield the economic benefits which we assert; second, those who feel that it implies undue burdens upon our taxpayers; and third, those who fear that these developments might injure our magnificent railway system.

The question is whether any one of all these projects are justified. We are no longer on theoretical grounds when we assert that Mid West transportation of bulk materials will be cheapened by these means. We have the actual beginning of experience. During the past year we have seen the Government barge line operating successfully upon the St. Louis-New Orleans segment with a rate down river on wheat about 8 cents a bushel less than by rail, and a rate up river on imported commodities of as much as 10 cents per hundred pounds less than by rail. During the past few months we have seen the barge line extended to St. Paul and Minneapolis, 12 cents per bushel lower by water than by rail, and we have seen the upriver rates on coffee and sugar 16 cents per hundred pounds less than by rail.

While we can point to these benefits, we shall not come into full realization of these services even on the lower or upper Mississippi until we have completed the other segments of the system. It is only then that we shall have diversified our traffic, established reserves of equipment, felt the benefits of private enterprise, which will give us the full values of cheaper transportation costs.

I believe that the statement often made that by the modernization of the Mississippi and the Great Lakes systems of waterways we shall decrease the freight on grain to the world markets by 10 cents a bushel is not far wrong. And by so doing we should increase the price of all grain to the farmer by 10 cents per bushel, and this 10 cents is the profit end of the price. One single year of such increase to our mid-west farmers would more than equal the entire capital outlay which we propose. I doubt if since the days when we transformed transportation from the wagon to the railroad have we seen so positive an opportunity to assist the prosperity of our people.

As to those who complain of the capital cost upon our taxpayers, it may be recalled that no great engineering projects can be consummated in a year. The completion of these projects are spread over from 2 to 10 years, even if they were all authorized to-morrow. I dare say the whole of our water-transportation projects I have mentioned could be accomplished with an increase in our present annual expenditure upon rivers and harbors of twenty millions a year. That a nation with an annual income of ninety billions can undertake to spend a tenth of 1 per cent of its national income in such works requires little argument. Upon this point we can do no better than quote the most successful statesman in economy in our national history—President Coolidge—who in his last message to Congress said, in referring to these very projects: "Expenditure of this character is compatible with economy. It is in the nature of capital investment."

Another criticism to which I have given great consideration is that the opening of these great waterways would endanger the stability of our railway system. Taking the country as a whole, the railways must ever bear the major burden of our goods traffic. And there are many classes of goods which will always go by rail even parallel with the waterways. And here is an old saying that is true: "New transportation facilities create business." It is well proved by our new highways.

At one time in our history we practically abandoned the highways and waterways for the railways. The invention of the gas engine has restored our highways and multiplied their traffic ten thousandfold. Yet the total volume of passengers and goods on our railways has increased threefold in 25 years; the next quarter of a century promises even a larger addition to our population than the last 25 years. The railways must provide for the major burden of this increase, and I believe most railway operators agree that our railways can well be supplemented in their provision for this increased traffic by fully developed waterways. I have no fear for their prosperity.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION

There must lie before us constantly the necessity to so organize these projects as to accomplish them with rigid economy and high efficiency. I am convinced that we have come into an entirely new era in the development of our water resources, and therefore we should give thought to the whole basis of our governmental organization, which bears upon control and execution of these developments, if we would have economic and efficient execution; if we would confine ourselves in rotation to the works most urgently needed; and if we would do justice by private enterprise and our taxpayers. One of our difficulties in the past has been to secure well-thought-out plans and policies in the development of our multitude of different water resources. And even when plans have been adopted we have incurred unpardonable wastes of money through lack of continuity in action. We need public understanding that appropriations for these projects must go through to completion or that they should not be undertaken.

Another of our problems requiring immediate consideration is the increase of equipment upon the river. We need to develop this question in such fashion that it shall ultimately be taken over by private enterprise, because in the long run it is through private competition only that we will have efficient use of the waterways. The Government undertook to pioneer the equipment for a modernized river through the barge line. The pioneering stage is not over and may not be over for some time. We must devise ways and means of larger equipment and devise the program for its ultimate taking over by private enterprise.

A further problem presents itself in that modern invention and our increase of population have introduced many new and complex factors into the planning and construction of some of these water improvements. So long as we are concerned solely with improving navigation upon our streams, the organization and administrative problems are comparatively simple. It is a function assigned to the Federal Government and administered by one Federal agency—the Corps of Engineers. But to-day on many of our streams we have other problems besides navigation. There is flood control, reclamation, and irrigation, which will loom even more largely 20 or 30 years hence when we shall want more land. We have problems of water distribution and water rights and domestic water. Beyond this private agencies are engaged in electrical power development under Government permit.

The most casual study of this subject will show that every different river in the United States has possibilities of development in from one to five of these particulars. Often enough these different interests conflict. The unit of development must be a drainage basin if we are to secure the full values from these our noblest resources.

Now, if you will study our Federal and State governmental agencies who have authority in these questions, you will find a most appalling lack of coordinated action.

In our Federal Government relations to these problems of navigation, flood control, power, domestic water, reclamation, and irrigation lie in four separate agencies of the Government. You will find that within our State governments we deal with these questions by from two to five different agencies. You will find also that county and district organizations—many of them—have authority on these questions.

Beyond this you will find that often enough from 2 to 20 States are interested in a single drainage. In other words, I have found it possible to compute that as many as 30 different independent governmental agencies may be interested in the development of a single drainage.

There is at times bitter conflict between these agencies and between States. I could take much of your time illustrating the friction which has grown up—the litigation which fills the courts and the conversion of these technical problems into politics with all of its inability to solve what are fundamentally engineering questions. We have in many cases abandoned the pouring of cement in order to pour out our emotions.

I need cite no greater instances than the Colorado River, the Chicago drainage diversion, and even the Mississippi flood, because the sacrifice of flood control to reclamation has been one of the contributary causes of that disaster.

I am not one of those who believe that we should ruthlessly uproot institutions, services, and relations between our States and the Federal Government in order that we may attain a paper perfection in plans of organization. What we really need is that we should build within these agencies the necessary links of coordination in such manner as will maintain both our local government and national responsibility, yet secure the coordinated development of each drainage.

Two years ago I made a tentative suggestion upon which every event since that time has brought further confirmation as to its necessity. That was that we should create separately upon a half dozen of our great drainages, where multiple problems occur, advisory commissions on which not only the various branches of our Federal Government should be represented, but that the time has come when the State governments concerned should be represented and where necessary local authorities should also have a voice; that it should be the duty of these advisory commissions to determine broad policies upon which the development should take place; that they should develop lands by which the different agencies of navigation, flood control, power, reclamation, and irrigation, and domestic water should proceed; that they should determine the economic urgency of the different segments of such plans. We have already in the Mississippi and St. Lawrence commissions a start upon this basis of organization, the former having to do with flood control alone.

I am not proposing any additional engineering staff. The material already collected and the large number of surveys ordered by the last session of Congress are a long stride toward the full provision of technical data. I do not propose that the new commissions should have any administrative authority; their only task should be to present the plans they formulate to Congress, to the States, and to the public at large. Once our legislative bodies have taken action, then the task of construction and operation should be left to responsible departmental agencies or private enterprise and not to boards or commissions.

These administrative suggestions are not proposals for centralization of government but decentralization; they are not proposals to displace the authority of Congress but to assist an already overworked body; they are not proposals of more than trivial expense but safeguarding from the waste of hundreds of millions in ill-planned development and loss of our full water resources.

CONCLUSIONS

I have stated on another occasion that the consummation of these beneficent projects are the greatest engineering undertakings of our history. They are more than that—they are undertakings worthy of the effort of mighty nations. There is nothing that so lifts the spirit, the ideals, and the faith of a people as confidence in their ability at great undertakings and the proof of this ability through fine achievement. It is the sort of display of national might and greatness which advances courage of men. There is nothing that should so appeal to the imagination of our people as the rediscovery of the resources of our continent through the application of the great tools science has given us. It is a sore need of the vast inland empire whose populations have a right to every contribution that can be made to their welfare and their prosperity. In the distribution of recovery from the war, our industrial sections have been more fortunate than the agricultural sections and their situation needs be met with no narrow spirit.

The development of our waterways will enlarge the wealth and income of all our people, will make for better homes and happier lives. It will further consummate that fine promise in the Constitution "to create a more perfect Union."

And, finally, I may again recall a statement of President Washington in recounting one of his pioneering journeys to this same Mid West. He said this:

"Prompted by these actual observations, I could not help taking a more contemplative and extensive view of the vast inland navigation of these United States, and could not but be struck with the immense diffusion and importance of it, and with the goodness of that Providence, which has dealt her favors to us with so profuse a hand. Would to God we may have the wisdom to improve them."

If we in our generation have so great a vision as the Father of our Country, we shall do it.

NATIONAL RIVERS AND HARBORS ASSOCIATION

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the annual convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Association will meet here to-morrow in Washington at the New Willard Hotel. They will discuss problems of waterways, including flood control. It would seem that this is a seasonable time to have printed in the RECORD the resolutions adopted at the last Atlantic Deep-waterway Convention held at Baltimore on September 15 to 27 last, containing as they do correlated problems concerning waterways. I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD the resolutions referred to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I suppose there is not a Member of the House who has not received numerous resolutions by various organizations on various subjects, and if they are all to be printed in the RECORD it would be burdensome. If we all came in here with these resolutions asking to print them in the RECORD, the RECORD could not contain them all. Therefore I object.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

SPEECH OF UNDERSECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MILLS

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an address made by Undersecretary of the Treasury Mills, upon taxation before the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston and the Economic Club of Worcester, Mass., on November 11. It contained some very instructive information that may be of value to Members in the consideration of the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from New York approve of the remarks?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of Hon. Ogden L. Mills:

OUR FEDERAL TAX SYSTEM

For the fourth time in seven years the state of Federal finances is such as to permit a substantial reduction of taxes. The prosperity of the country, a sound policy of debt retirement, and wise and economical management of public affairs have combined to produce this favorable situation. The causes are obvious enough, yet in their eagerness to avail themselves of the fruits some people seem inclined to overlook the facts and to create a situation which will make difficult like efficiency in the future. As I shall point out a little later, excessive or ill-advised tax reduction is not without its serious consequences.

Rather from accident than from design, our Federal tax system is, on the whole, a well balanced and equitable one. By that I mean that direct taxes—or, as I use this term, those taxes that are not, generally speaking, passed on to the consumer—and indirect taxes—or those that are passed on—are fairly well apportioned. As a consequence there is a reasonable distribution of the burden in accordance with ability to pay. We received last year in direct taxes—that is, income or estate taxes—approximately $2,320,000,000, and in indirect taxes—that is, customs and miscellaneous internal revenue—approximately $1,150,000,000.

It is obvious that the scales lean very definitely in favor of those who are not subject to direct taxes, and while such lack of balance is unquestionably proper, yet inequalities do exist that are hard to justify; inequalities that will necessarily be accentuated should some of the existing excise taxes be repealed. They are traceable, in the main, to two causes: First, the number of direct taxpayers making a real contribution to the support of government is too limited; in the second place, the rates imposed on some classes of direct taxpayers are out of line. Under the first head I classify individual income taxpayers; under the second, corporations or their stockholders.

Under the revenue act of 1926 more than 44 per cent of the individual taxpayers were relieved from income-tax payments. In 1924, 4,489,698 individuals returned taxable net income; whereas in 1925 the number had fallen to 2,501,166. For 1925, 9,560 taxpayers returning net income in excess of $100,000 returned about 49 per cent of the total tax returned; 327,018 individuals, returning net income of $10,000 and over, returned $701,497,726 out of a total of $734,555,183. In other words, of those reporting taxes due, 2,174,148 individuals returned approximately $33,000,000 of tax, while 327,018 individuals returned $701,000,000 of tax. According to these returns less than 0.3 of 1 per cent of our population returned 95½ per cent of our total income tax; about 1.9 per cent returned 4½ per cent, and the remaining 97.8 per cent of the population returned no tax whatever. For those returning taxable net income not in excess of $5,000 the rate was 0.29 of 1 per cent. For those returning taxable income in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $10,000, 0.58 of 1 per cent.

These figures make it only too clear that, in so far as individuals are concerned, the income tax has ceased to be a national tax and has become a class tax of very limited character. This is a situation which must be accepted. The water is over the dam. But, as between individual income taxpayers, some of the inequalities should be ironed out by revision of the rates applicable to the so-called intermediate brackets.

Turning now to our second group—that is to say, the corporations or their stockholders—you will have noted that I treat the corporation-income tax as a direct tax; which, according to the definition I have given, implies that it is not passed on to the consumer, and must therefore be paid by the stockholder. I know that many business men will challenge such a conclusion, but leaving asido the indirect effects of such a tax, more especially when levied at high or excessive rates, and admitting that there are exceptions to the rule, my individual opinion is that except under unusual circumstances a tax on net income can not be shifted by the person on whom it is laid in the form of an addition to price. This, I repeat, is simply my own personal conclusion, but it is supported by competent authority.

It is in agreement with the work of the committee on national debt and taxation of Great Britain, charged with the duty of investigating the incidence of income tax. That committee decided that the issue could be reduced to a question of fact subject to statistical study. Such a study was made by them for the two fiscal years 1920–21 and 1922–23, the income-tax returns of a sample of all public companies or corporations being used as a source for the necessary data. The tabulated data indicated:

(1) A significant proportion of the total sales in each industry were made at no profit or at a loss during each quarter of the two years studied.

(2) The median range of sales were made at no profit or at small profit ratios.

(3) The trend of profits during the quarter periods studied followed the trend in prices.

The conclusion of the committee was that prices are determined in the immediate market, and that the marginal producers—those making no profits—control a significant proportion of the volume of sales at any time. Under such circumstances it would be impossible to shift the tax. The committee stated, "We conclude that the broad economic argument is true over the whole field, and for approximately the whole of the time, any exceptions being local or temporary and insufficient to invalidate it."

Conditions in this country do not seem to be essentially different. Preliminary statistics of income for 1926 show that, whereas 249,000 corporations reported a profit, no less than 164,000 reported deficits aggregating over $2,000,000,000.

It seems probable, therefore, that in the main our present tax of 13½ per cent on the net income of corporations ultimately comes out of the pockets of the owners of the corporations, the stockholders. Certainly there is no economic justification for postponing the reduction of a rate admittedly out of line on the theory that the entire tax was passed on to the consumers last year and that an immediate reduction must therefore necessarily spell a bonus to the corporations.

It has been estimated that there are some 3,000,000 stockholders in the United States. There are probably more. These 3,000,000 stockholders pay more than their just share of taxes, not only as compared with other income-tax payers, but as compared with all other classes of taxpayers. In so far as the individual income-tax payers are concerned, it must be remembered that there are only 2,500,000 of them; that the average rate of tax on their income has been reduced to 4.20 per cent; that less than 9,000 pay at the rate of 13½ per cent on their taxable income; and that that rate applies only to net incomes in excess of $110,000, whereas the 3,000,000 stockholders are taxed at the rate of 13½ per cent on their proportionate share of the income of the corporation, and this irrespective of whether their individual income is sufficiently great to subject them to the individual income tax at that rate, or, for that matter, to any individual income tax at all.

Comparing the tax paid by corporations—that is, by their stockholders—with all other classes of taxpayers, it will be found that last year, exclusive of back taxes, the former as such contributed $1,125,000,000 to the Federal Government, as contrasted with $763,000,000 paid by individual income-tax payers—many of them, of course, stockholders—and with $1,150,000,000 paid through indirect taxes by our entire population of 114,000,000 people. There is no logic or justice in such a discrimination. There are, to be sure, many advantages in the corporate form of conducting business, but these certainly do not constitute sufficient justification for such a disproportionate tax burden.

Looking, then, at the whole picture, and not just selfishly at some particular part, the most important feature of any tax revision program should be a reduction of the corporation tax rate, and, from a negative standpoint, if we desire to retain some measure of balance between direct and indirect taxes there should be no further repeal at present of existing excise or indirect taxes. It must not be forgotten that, whatever the intentions of the framers of the 1926 revenue act, the results as shown by the first full year of its operation were that indirect taxes yielded $197,000,000 less and direct taxes $192,000,000 more. Automobile taxes were reduced about $72,000,000.

There are, to be sure, other desirable changes, such as the revision of rates applicable to the intermediate individual income-tax brackets and the repeal of the Federal estate tax.

In undertaking, however, this or any other tax revision, there are two outstanding factors which must be kept constantly in mind—first, the revenue needs of the Government; and, secondly, strict adherence to the sound financial practices that have hitherto prevailed. Substantial tax reduction is assured in any event, and even if it were not, after three tax revisions downward our present situation is by no means intolerable. Under these happy circumstances, there can be no conceivable excuse for abandoning the sound principle of a balanced budget, and by a balanced budget I mean that revenues shall be adequate to cover all expenditures in any given fiscal year, so that it will be unnecessary to resort to borrowing in order to meet expenditures chargeable against ordinary receipts. We have been pretty critical of foreign countries when they, under most difficult circumstances, have failed to observe the principle of a balanced budget, and have prided ourselves on our strict adherence to this principle. It is surprising, therefore, to see responsible business men advising the Congress to follow a course that will almost inevitably lead to an unbalanced budget. I am referring to those gentlemen who, without detailed and careful study of either expenditures or probable receipts, are urging tax reductions that in the aggregate far exceed the figures indicated as possible by the official estimates. They do not criticize the estimates in detail, they do not point out in what respect, if any, they err—they satisfy themselves and expect others to be satisfied with the argument that in the past surpluses have exceeded estimates, and on the strength of that argument alone they urge the Congress to reduce taxes by $400,000,000, with a continuing surplus of only $275,000,000 in sight. They would not run their own businesses on any such haphazard basis, and they should not advise public servants to run the public business along lines less conservative than they observe in protecting their private interests.

Just a word about these so-called excessive surpluses of the past few years. It is interesting to note that if we exclude back-tax collections, less internal-revenue refunds, and the receipts from the disposal of such capital assets as railroad securities, farm-loan bonds, assets of the War Finance Corporation, and surplus war material, in the year 1923 there would not have been a surplus, but a deficit of $89,000,000; in the year 1924, a surplus of but $169,000,000; in the year 1925, a deficit of $93,000,000; in the year 1926, a surplus of $162,000,000; and in 1927, of $221,000,000, instead of $635,000,000; while the surpluses of 1928 and 1929, exclusive of special receipts from the above-named sources, are estimated at $137,000,000 and $199,000,000, respectively. Of the two billion approximately of debt retired from surplus during the five fiscal years ending June 30, 1927, no less than $1,700,000,000 is accounted for by these special temporary items, and no less than $900,000,000 from the realization of capital assets. It must be conceded that there could be no better application of the proceeds of the sale of capital assets than to the reduction of the national debt. These figures present a pretty complete answer to those people who, far from rejoicing over the existence of these surpluses, and our consequent ability to reduce the burden of the national debt, deplore them as evidences of an imaginary injustice to taxpayers.

For my part, I am confident that the great body of the American people desire to see the finances of the Federal Government so conducted that a policy will be maintained which without fail will insure a balanced budget year in and year out, and at the same time permit the steady reduction of the national debt at a reasonably rapid rate.

There is no immediate danger in so far as the second policy is concerned, but the day is not far distant when, in the name of tax reduction and of relieving the present generation, we may be urged to reduce the amount applicable to sinking-fund retirements or to change the provision of law whereby the repayment of the principal of our foreign debts is applied to the reduction of our national debt. Indeed, the second proposition has already been advanced in responsible quarters.

Such suggestions do not take into consideration how heavy debt service charges are—we had paid some eight billions in interest on our war debt up to June 30 last—and how rapidly they increase with the length of the life of the debt. Thus, for instance, if we retire a debt of $25,000,000,000 uniformly over a 25-year term, and pay an average rate of interest of 4¼ per cent, the total interest cost will be $16,000,000,000. If the term is made 30 years, over three and one-half billion is added to the total interest. If 62 years is taken, as some persons have urged, total interest would be $46,272,000,000, or nearly twice the original principal. So whereas a 25-year program would cost a total of $41,000,000,000, a 62-year program would cost $71,000,000,000.

Along with tax reduction, the economic and orderly management of the public debt has been the special problem of the Treasury since the close of the war. I wish now to direct your attention to a particular phase of this problem, namely, the tax-exempt feature of Federal bonds.

As early as 1921 the Treasury favored an amendment to the Constitution permitting the United States to tax incomes derived from securities issued by the States and their political subdivisions after the ratification of the amendment, and, conversely, permitting each State to tax the income derived by its residents from securities issued under the authority of the United States. As recently as 1925 the Treasury Department has called the attention of the Congress to the evils arising from the existence of great masses of tax-exempt securities, which offered to the wealthy the means of avoiding the payment of income taxes to the Federal Government. In the Sixty-seventh Congress a resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution along the lines above indicated passed the House, but was not acted on by the Senate. In the Sixty-eighth Congress a similar resolution was defeated in the House by 41 votes. No further action looking to the submission of such an amendment to the States has been taken.

It is probable that the time when such an amendment could have been effective has passed. There are now outstanding $15,946,000,000 of wholly tax-exempt securities, of which $11,841,000,000 have been issued by the States and their political subdivisions, $145,000,000 by Territories and insular possessions, $2,165,000,000 by the United States Government, and $1,795,000,000 by the Federal farm loan system. Since these securities are being issued at the rate of over a billion dollars a year, it is apparent that so many will be in existence before the constitutional amendment in question could be submitted and accepted by the necessary number of States that it would be ineffective. Moreover, the revenue act of 1926 reduced surtax rates to such an extent that the inducement to avoid them by resort to investment in tax-exempt securities has to a very large extent disappeared. The statistics of income for 1925 show that the total amount of tax-exempt securities returned by individuals was $5,041,000,000. The income received from these securities amounted to $230,000,000. Had these securities been fully taxable, the revenue to the Government would not have been in excess of $11,000,000.

Given all these circumstances, I have reached the conclusion that the reasons which led the Treasury to urge the adoption of a constitutional amendment relating to tax-exempt securities have been so modified by time and subsequent events, including the failure of two separate Congresses to act in the matter, as to justify a reconsideration of the problem and the following conclusions:

If States and their political subdivisions are to continue to issue tax-exempt securities at the rate of a billion dollars a year, there is no logical reason why the Federal Government should continue to issue its securities under a provision of law which only permits exemption from the normal tax. This puts the Federal Government at a serious disadvantage, a disadvantage which is very considerably mitigated, however, owing to the fact that corporations are subject only to the normal tax and that United States securities held by corporations are therefore tax exempt. On the other hand, this very situation makes it difficult, if not impossible, for the United States Government to sell new issues of its securities to individual investors. United States securities are sufficiently attractive to corporations so that the latter are more than willing to take the entire block of new issues offered from time to time.

This being the case, the price which corporations are willing to pay inevitably fixes the price at which the United States is able to market its securities, and since the corporations are wholly tax exempt on their income from such securities, whereas the individual income derived from these securities is subject to the surtax, the former are in a position to pay a price which might well make the securities unattractive from the standpoint of the individual investor. Thus, for instance, the Treasury 3⅜ per cent bonds were selling on October 4 on a basis to yield 3.25 per cent. On that basis they would have yielded to a man with an income of $100,000 from other sources, after tax payment, but 2.60 per cent; to a man with an income of $50,000, 2.83 per cent; and to a man with an income of $25,000, 3.02 per cent; whereas the corporation would get the full yield of 3.25 per cent. Three and one-half per cent three to five year Treasury notes were selling on October 4 on a basis to yield 3.51 per cent; they would yield but 2.81, 3.05, and 3.26 to individual investors with incomes of $100,000, $50,000, and $25,000, respectively, as compared with a yield of 3.51 to the corporation. The corporations were thus able to obtain the full advantage of the extraordinary quality of a United States security from the standpoint of safety, and because of this tax-exempt feature obtain a return equivalent, in so far as the 3⅜ per cent Treasury bonds are concerned, to 3.76 per cent on a taxable security, and in so far as the 3½ per cent Treasury notes are concerned equivalent to 4.06 on a taxable security. But this obviously is not true of the individual investor.

The Treasury Department is sometimes criticized for not making a greater effort to distribute its securities more widely. The situation above described under which United States securities are wholly tax exempt when held by corporations, but not wholly tax exempt when held by individuals, makes it impossible to do so. Such a situation is undesirable. During the war Government securities were very widely distributed, as the result of vigorous campaigns conducted in every community, and which reached almost every home. At the time it was held, and rightly held, that it was desirable, if Government securities were to be issued in large blocks, that they should be held by as many separate individuals as possible rather than in the hands of a few large holders. Such a feeling was sound. It is still sound to-day. But under existing circumstances, as the war loans are gradually being refunded into securities bearing a lower rate of interest—and there would be no justification, of course, for not refunding them—the number of holders of United States securities tends constantly to become more limited.

How could it be otherwise when States and municipalities are in a position to issue their securities free from all taxation? The average rate of interest paid by all States on their total indebtedness during 1926 was about 4.14 per cent. New York State municipal stock with a life of 30 years sells on a basis to yield 4 per cent to the individual investor, while the man with an income of $25,000 will receive but a net yield of 3.02 per cent on a 16–20-year 3⅜ per cent United States Government bond. Moreover, even after Federal taxes, he can receive approximately 4 per cent on the highest grade of public utility bonds.

These figures make it perfectly apparent that in so far as the individual investor is concerned the United States Government is at a serious disadvantage to-day in marketing its securities because of the provision in the Liberty loan act which limits the tax-exempt privilege to the normal tax. Under these circumstances the Treasury Department believes that the Congress should give serious consideration to an amendment of the second Liberty loan act, as amended, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury in issuing securities in the future to make them exempt from the surtax as well as the normal tax.

The enactment of such an amendment would not in any way interfere with the adoption of an amendment permitting the taxation of so-called tax-exempt securities should Congress and the States deem this to be desirable. But, pending its adoption, there is no reason why the Treasury Department should be put at a disadvantage in the marketing of its securities as compared with States and their subdivisions, or why individual investors who desire to acquire United States Government securities should be discriminated against. Taking the long-time view of the situation, I believe that the enactment of such a constitutional amendment is desirable, for I consider it inconsistent with our principles of democratic government that our laws be so framed as to permit any class of our citizens to escape their just tax obligations.

MEMORIALS FROM THE FLORIDA STATE LEGISLATURE

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some memorials and resolutions to the Congress of the United States from the Legislature of the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert certain memorials and resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which are as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 7

Be it resolved by the senate, the house of representatives concurring, That—

Whereas the people of Florida, by an overwhelming majority, adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the State from levying in the future any inheritance or income tax; and

Whereas the State's finances are in such an admirable condition that, although it has no severance tax, no corporation tax, no corporation stock transfer tax, no franchise tax, no income tax, and no inheritance tax, it has no bonded indebtedness of any kind or character, does not owe a dollar, and has, as of the 1st of April, in its treasury in excess of $11,466,280.05 in cash, thus demonstrating beyond question that the levying of an inheritance or an income tax is absolutely unnecessary in this State; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, in enacting the present revenue law providing therein for a Federal inheritance tax but allowing those States that have inheritance taxes a credit to the extent of 80 per cent of the taxes so paid, the avowed purpose of which was to force the States of Florida, Alabama, and others similarly situated to levy an inheritance tax; and

Whereas taxing the dead, either by Federal legislation or State legislation, is a capital levy and should not be resorted to except in time of war or other grave emergency; and

Whereas an inheritance tax, if it is to be written into law at all, is a prerogative of the State, a political question exclusively within the province of the State; and

Whereas Congress, by giving to the respective States that have inheritance taxes credit for 80 per cent of the taxes so paid, admits and concedes that the Federal Government does not need the revenue; and

Whereas the action of Congress, in endeavoring by Federal legislation to coerce a sovereign State into enacting legislation contrary to the wishes of the people of that State in a question of purely local concern, is unprecedented, arbitrary, indefensible, and contrary to the very fundamentals of our American form of government: Be it further

Resolved, That we protest against the passage of a Federal inheritance tax, and especially one in the form of that which has been passed, and we regard such action upon the part of Congress as unnecessary, uncalled for, indefensible, without justification, and contrary to the fundamental principles upon which the Republic is founded; that we reaffirm our confidence in the wisdom of the people of Florida in adopting the constitutional amendment prohibiting the Legislature of Florida in the future from ever levying any State income or inheritance taxes; and that the State of Florida declines to be coerced into repealing the constitutional provision forbidding the levying of taxes upon the estates of dead men, but avows its intention of forever maintaining and continuing the constitutional amendment in question: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to demand the repeal of the Federal inheritance tax and that they continue to take such vigorous action as may in their judgment be deemed best to bring this about; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to all Members of Congress, the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the chairman of the United States Senate Finance Committee, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, the press of this State and of the Nation.

Approved by the governor April 23, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 7, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled resolution on file in this office.

House Concurrent Resolution 8

Whereas it appears from reports of the Treasury of the United States that a surplus of funds is being accumulated; and

Whereas an excessive income tax has a strong tendency to stifle trade and cause the withdrawal of capital from active business enterprises: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress use every honorable means to amend the income tax law of the United States to the end that a substantial reduction of the tax on incomes be made.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state is hereby requested to send a copy of this resolution, under the great seal of the State, to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the United States Senate Finance Committee, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the press of this State.

Approved by the governor April 23, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,

House Memorial 6

A joint resolution proposing a memorial to Congress indorsing the support by the Government of adequate appropriations for the support of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves

Whereas there is located in Florida two separate regiments of the Florida National Guard which are maintained to a large extent by Federal appropriation of money; and

Whereas there are also located in the State of Florida various units of the Organized Reserves constituted under the provisions of the national defense act of 1920; and

Whereas the National Guard forms an essential and necessary organization for use in peace time as evidenced by its services during the recent hurricane disaster in Florida, as well as an adequate fighting organization in the event of war; and

Whereas the people of Florida desire to see the National Guard and the Organized Reserves of the United States supported by adequate appropriations reasonably sufficient to enable these organizations to accomplish the purpose of their organization, said appropriations to be as liberal as may be consistent with the welfare of the public and the general good: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Legislature of the State of Florida herein memorializes and requests its two Senators in the United States and its four Representatives in the Congress of the United States to use all honorable means in their power to prevent the handicapping or crippling of the National Guard or Organized Reserve by the withdrawal of any existing appropriations therefrom, and that they use all honorable means in their power to secure for the use of the National Guard and Organized Reserves as liberal an appropriation for the training of such National Guard and reserves as may be consistent with the welfare of the Government, and that a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the United States Senators from Florida, and to each of the Congressmen from Florida, to the President and Vice President of the United States, and to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to the Chief of the Militia Bureau of the War Department, all duly certified to and under the great seal of the State of Florida.

Approved by the governor May 25, 1927.

Joint Memorial Resolution 3

TO THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Whereas the Federal Government has built at Muscle Shoals, Ala., at an expense of more than $150,000,000 a vast plant designated for the manufacture of nitrates for munitions in time of war and for the production of fertilizer products in time of peace; and

Whereas this plant has lain idle for more than eight years since the close of the World War, thus disregarding one of the specific provisions of the national defense act under which the plant was authorized, which provision was intended to result in the production of nitrates at a cost that would materially reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers of the United States; and

Whereas the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals representing an investment of $100,000,000, instead of being operated for the manufacture of cheaper fertilizer for the farmers of the Nation are, and have been, idle for many years while the Wilson Dam development is temporarily leased to private interests; and

Whereas the farmers of the United States are using more than 7,000,000 tons of fertilizer per year, costing more than $200,000,000, and the farmers of Florida alone are spending more than $14,000,000 per year for their fertilizer; and

Whereas we have the assurance of competent authorities that the facilities of the Muscle Shoals plant are adequate for the production of ample nitrates for the needs of American agriculture: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and hereby is, memorialized to enact at its next session such legislation as will without further costly delay start the vast Muscle Shoals plant to its intended work, which was the manufacture of nitrates for the needs of our Nation's agriculture, the production of munitions for war, and other national-defense purposes, and that any power in excess of these requirements be distributed to those States within transmission distance: Be it

Resolved further, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL and Representatives SEARS, DRANE, GREEN, and YON are hereby urgently requested to use their most vigorous effort to accomplish the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of the State of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State, to the President of the United States, to the Congress of this Nation, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the governor May 25, 1927.

House Memorial 7

A memorial to the Congress of the United States of America, asking that the grave of Territorial Governor Duval be properly marked with a bronze tablet, whereon shall be given suitable credit for services rendered as Territorial Governor of Florida

Whereas W. P. Duval, Florida's first Territorial governor, serving during the years 1822–1834, departed this life on the 18th day of March, 1854; and

Whereas the remains of the said W. P. Duval were buried on the 20th day of March, 1854, in the Congressional Cemetery, range 46, site 5, Washington, D. C.; and

Whereas the said W. P. Duval served his country faithfully and fearlessly as the first Territorial Governor of Florida, and was a pioneer in the settling of the State of Florida; and

Whereas the faithful service rendered by the said W. P. Duval is worthy of recognition by the United States of America: Therefore be it Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to make suitable recognition of the service rendered by W. P. Duval as the first Territorial Governor of Florida, and that a suitable bronze tablet be placed upon the grave of said W. P. Duval, and that proper inscription be made thereon, recognizing the service rendered by the said W. P. Duval as first Territorial Governor of Florida during the years 1822–1834, and that proper appropriation be made therefor.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state of Florida be requested to send a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida, to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Florida.

Approved by the governor June 6, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Memorial 7, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

House Joint Memorial 5

Whereas vast annual importations of citrus fruits are made into the United States from Porto Rico, Cuba, Jamaica, and the Isle of Pines; and

Whereas much of this fruit is picked and shipped into our country while in an immature state, thus placing upon the market fruit of low quality, unpalatable, and unfit for human consumption; and

Whereas such importation of immature fruit is received into the ports of our Nation without restriction, inspection, and regulation now being imposed upon our domestic production by Federal laws; and

Whereas this practice not only places fruit of doubtful healthfulness and low food value before the consuming public of the United States but likewise imposes undue, unfair, and destructive competition upon the citrus growers of the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and is hereby, memorialized to enact at its next session such legislation as will properly regulate the importation of all immature fruit in such manner as to correct and eliminate the evils of the present baneful practice; be it

Resolved further, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL and Representatives SEARS, DRANE, GREEN, and YON are hereby urgently requested to use their most vigorous efforts to accomplish the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of the State of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State, to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the governor May 25, 1927.

MEMORIALS FROM THE CONNECTICUT STATE LEGISLATURE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a memorial to the Congress from the Legislature of the State of Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. TILSON. On the subject of taxation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The inheritance tax?

Mr. TILSON. I believe it is.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman not know that it is? [Laughter.] I do not object—I just wanted to find out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the permission of the House just given to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I do so by inserting here a resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to repeal the provisions of the revenue act of 1926 which pertain to the taxation of estates. This resolution was agreed to by both houses of the General Assembly of Connecticut at the regular session of the legislature last April. The matter referred to is as follows:

Resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to repeal the provisions of the revenue act of 1926 which pertain to the taxation of estates

Resolved by this assembly:

Whereas by the provisions of the Federal revenue act of 1926, which impose taxes on the estates of deceased persons, this State is being subjected to a form of coercion in order to compel the imposition of State death taxes at rates higher than its citizens desire to impose upon themselves for their own needs and benefit; and

Whereas any form of coercion or financial inducement to States by Federal authority is in distinct conflict with the spirit of our constitutional government, is offensive to sound policy, and is destructive of the responsibility of citizens and of States with respect to the power to levy taxes, the most vital of the powers which inhere in government; and

Whereas joint levies of taxes by the Federal Government on the one hand and by the States of the Union on the other hand are unprecedented in the history of this country, and are particularly offensive when the Federal enactment operates in any way to influence or control the exercise of sovereignty by the respective States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the general assembly that the Congress of the United States should forthwith repeal the provisions of the revenue act of 1926 which impose taxes on the estates of deceased persons, leaving this field of taxation exclusively to the States of the Union in times of peace; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States, and they are hereby requested to spread these resolutions in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or to select such other means as may be appropriate to apprise the Senators and Representatives of other States of the contents hereof.

Approved April 29, 1927.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,

Office of the Secretary, ss:

I, Francis A. Pallotti, secretary of the State of Connecticut, and keeper of the seal thereof, and of the original record of the acts and resolutions of the general assembly of said State, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of the resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to repeal the provisions of the revenue act of 1926 which pertain to the taxation of estates, with the original record of the same now remaining in this office, and have found the said copy to be a correct and complete transcript thereof.

And I further certify that the said original record is a public record of the said State of Connecticut now remaining in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State at Hartford this 22d day of November, 1927.

[SEAL.] FRANCIS A. PALLOTTI, Secretary.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FOSS, OF MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my colleague Mr. Foss has been prevented from taking the oath of office on account of illness. I make this statement so that it may appear in the RECORD.

CONGRESS INCONGRUOUS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD some remarks that I made myself upon the subject of General von Steuben, and also other remarks that I made upon the subject of fight films.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, when Dempsey fought Tunney in Soldiers' Field, Chicago, 19 governors, 20 United States Senators, and dozens of Congressmen sat at the ring side. Besides there were scores of State legislators, mayors, and officials of all sorts. They constituted a privileged class. The mass of people over the country desired to see the fight also, but were denied the privilege. Fight films may not be transported for exhibition purposes. Yet vivid descriptions of the fight were permitted over the radio. Newspapers carried lurid tales of the encounter. But to see with the eye was taboo. It is like the lassie telling the lad, "That's all there is; there isn't any more."

Pictures of the fighters before the event took place, pictures showing how the mighty have fallen, and pictures of the champion being acclaimed to the vast throng which gathered from all parts of the United States are permitted to be screened. Yet it is considered illegal to fill in the spaces between. It is like being invited to attend a sumptuous banquet and only being served with soup and nuts—the rest being left to the imagination.

If the law was passed way back in 1912 to prevent the encouragement of the brutal instincts it has woefully failed. The radio recital gave great emphasis to the evident ferocity of the contest; yet radio transportation of the fight was not prohibited. No; it was not a sense of refinement that prompted Congress to adopt the measure. It was rather to prevent films showing Jack Johnson to be the pugilistic champion. This indication of black supremacy ruffled the feelings of persons in certain sections of the country. That cause has now been removed.

Thousands upon thousands listened in on the radio and, I do not hesitate to say, enjoyed themselves immensely. They read the papers which gave minute descriptions of every blow struck. They viewed such portions of the motion pictures as were permitted by the censors and the law. They did not just happen to do these things—they deliberately sought them out. This is proof positive that the public at large, not blessed with this world's goods enabling them to migrate to the scene of action, demands the repeal of this clause so that they might be accorded the same privileges of their more fortunate brethren—that of viewing with the eye.

The Government itself is a business partner with the fighters and promoters. In the first Tunney-Dempsey encounter at the Sesquicentennial Stadium the Government collected over a million dollars in taxes. This included the income tax of Tunney and Dempsey. The management made far less than what the Government reaped. In the second fight the Government took in far more than a million dollars.

Recent decisions of the Federal courts have shown the preposterousness of the statute. The courts have held the film may be shown but may not be transported. Yet the films can not be shown unless it is transported across the State borders. That is like the old jingle, "Hang your clothes on the mulberry bush, but don't go near the water." That statute, as now interpreted, has given rise to a new industry—bootlegging films. Colonel Forbes, a recent inmate of Atlanta, tells us that a former President and many Washington officials viewed the Dempsey-Carpentier fight film at the country home of Ned McLean and all knew the law had been broken in the transportation of the film to Washington. Forbes added, "It was amusing to see how everyone who was there joined the purity squad when the news leaked out that the film had been shown." It is high time to clean house and wipe out this statute.

For this reason I have introduced this day an act repealing the act of July 31, 1912, which prohibits the importation and the interstate transportation of fight films.

FARMERS' FINANCE CORPORATION MEASURE

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon a bill which I introduced yesterday creating a farmers finance corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I introduced on yesterday, for the consideration of Congress and the country, a bill to create the farmers' finance corporation, which would advance, through the banks to the farmers, loans on basic agricultural commodities so as to enable the farmers to hold their commodities until a reasonable price, to be determined by them, can be obtained, provided the farmers themselves desire such help.

The bill provides a complete solution of the overproduction problem, meets every reasonable objection to other farm relief bills, and without equalization fees, expensive machinery, or red tape puts the farmer on an absolute parity with those engaged in other industries or enterprises. It helps the farmer directly, not indirectly, makes clear his every right, raises no mooted questions or difficult issues, makes him the master of his own problems, and assures him of the prosperity to which he is so justly entitled.

The bill has a complete referendum and recall. It would not become binding on any individual farmer unless he so desired, and would not operate as to any particular agricultural commodity unless farmers planting 75 per cent of the acreage of that commodity desired operation of the corporation as to the commodity, and then be binding only on those so desiring. If the farmers producing either or all of the basic commodities should find unsatisfactory the operations under the bill, they could in effect repeal it at any time.

The farmers' friends, not his enemies, would control his destinies. There would be no dangerous bureaucratic control of the farmers' rights and only necessary governmental agencies with well-defined duties and powers. The bill is not in the interest of any organization, corporation, or any man or set of men other than the farmer, and is drawn with his sole and only interest in view, and yet it is not unfair or unjust to anyone.

The farmer would handle his own commodities and get their full value, with no unnecessary profit going to middlemen or absorbed by extensive, expensive marketing machinery. The farmer and his fellows would receive for their commodities the highest possible reasonable price from the manufacturers and exporters and would get all of the price without deductions for fees, commissions, or other so-called marketing costs.

It gives the farmers a chance to become masters of their own fortune and makes clear and unmistakable the plan.

The bill, in my humble judgment, is a more satisfactory farm relief measure than any heretofore written.

But may I quote from the bill, so that it may be seen whether or not my faith is well founded?

The first seven sections and the last several sections are largely taken from the War Finance Corporation act and will not be repeated here. The part of the bill included in sections 8 to 23, inclusive, makes it different from the War Finance Corporation act, is the heart of the measure, and is as follows:

SEC. 8. That the corporation shall be empowered and authorized to make advances on farm products as collateral security to any bank, banker, trust company, or farm organization in the United States which has rendered financial assistance to any farmer, group of farmers, or farm organization, provided that—

(a) Farmers receiving such financial assistance shall have entered into a contract with the corporation as set out in section 11 of this act and shall have kept and abided by all contracts so made.

(b) The bank, banker, trust company, or farm organization receiving such advance shall have made with the corporation a contract as set out in section 12 of this act and shall have kept and abided by all contracts so made.

(c) No such advance shall be made on account of or to any farmer after the passage of this act while failing and refusing to sign the contract set out in section 11, who produces two crops of the product or products herein authorized as collateral security, unless the farmers' council, hereinafter authorized and provided for, by a two-thirds vote relieves such farmer or farmers from his or their default.

(d) Farmers planting 75 per cent of the acreage in the United States, growing the particular product offered as collateral, shall have signed contracts as set out in section 11 and be bound by such contracts at the time of the advance.

(e) After the first loans are made hereunder additional farmers growing the particular product shall sign said contract, set out in section 11, so as to bring the acreage grown by producers bound by the contract up to 85 per cent of the whole grown in the United States within 1 year from first loan; 95 per cent within 2 years, and 97 per cent within 3 years and thereafter.

(f) The farmers' advisory council, hereinafter authorized, shall have declared by majority vote that it is necessary to obtain financial assistance from the corporation in the handling of the particular commodity and made written request therefor, signed by the chairman and secretary of said council.

(g) Such advances shall not be made for more than the average price of such commodity since January 1, 1927, and then only for such amount as is approved by the council for the particular product, and notice thereof given to the corporation.

(h) The advisory council for the specific basic commodity must have passed a resolution, notifying the corporation of its action, in which it shall be provided, in accordance with the contract set out in section 11 of this act, that all farmers growing said commodity in the United States, under said contract, shall reduce their acreage cultivated in said commodity for the next year, such fractional part of the crop grown for the ensuing year as the crop thus produced, together with the part of the crop carried over from the ensuing years, will probably total only so much as will be salable at or above an average price. The percentage of reduction of the acreage of the next crop must be determined definitely, stated in the resolution and notice thereof given to the corporation and to the banks, or other organizations of the United States through which the corporation is loaning money on said basic commodity. The farmer growing this specific commodity shall be notified through his bank or organization as set out in the contract with the corporation.

(i) The advisory council must have taken off the market all of said commodity grown and owned by farmers under the contract set out in section 11 and refuse to offer for sale or permit the offer of any part thereof until there is such a demand for same as will cause the commodity to sell for a sufficient amount to pay in full the loan made by the corporation, together with all interest, storage charges, insurance, inspection and grading fees, and such an additional amount to the producer as may arise from sale of the commodity at a fair and reasonable price.

(j) The conditions of durability, preparation, processing, preserving, and marketing of such commodity, or the products therefrom, shall be adaptable to the storage or future disposition of same.

(k) The commodity shall not be of such an inferior grade as to be liable to spoilage during the period of such loan by reason of its inherent nature or inferior condition.

(l) The grades and qualities of such commodity shall be desirable in the interest of the domestic consumers of the United States or for which normally a foreign market exists.

(m) The loan or advance shall be upon a commodity properly conditioned, preserved, stored, and safeguarded.

COMMODITY ADVISORY COUNCIL

SEC. 9. (a) The advisory council for each basic commodity, for which loans are authorized under this act, shall be known as the farmers' ——— advisory council, using the name of the particular commodity as a part of the name of the council, and may be appointed after the passage of this act by the governors of the States growing the particular commodity as follows, to wit: Governors of States growing 10 per cent of such commodity produced in the United States may appoint one member each; governors of States growing 20 per cent or more of such commodity may appoint two each. The Secretary of Agriculture, immediately after the passage of this act, shall notify the governors of the various States growing each basic commodity of the right of such governor to appoint a member or members of the various commodity councils. The term of office of the two younger members so appointed shall be for one year, the next two older shall be for two years, the two next older for three years, and the other members shall be for four years. After the expiration of the terms of those first appointed the term shall be for four years each. All vacancies shall be filled by the governor from whose State the vacancy occurs, except as hereinafter provided. In case of death, resignation, or removal the appointment or selection shall be for the remainder of the unexpired term.

(b) Members of each commodity advisory council shall serve without salary but shall be paid by the corporation as hereinafter authorized a per diem compensation not exceeding $20 for attending meetings of the council and for time devoted to other business of the council. Each council member shall be paid by the board his necessary traveling expenses to and from meetings of the council and his expenses incurred for subsistence, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law, while engaged upon the business of the council.

(c) After appointment, the respective advisory councils may be called together for the first meeting and organization by written notice, signed by three or more such members designating the time and place of the meeting, registered to each member of the particular council at least 10 days before the date of the meeting.

(d) Each commodity advisory council shall fix its place and time of meetings thereafter, and shall remain in session for such lengths of time as may be necessary in the discharge of the duties of the council.

POWERS OF THE ADVISORY COUNCIL

SEC. 10. The commodity advisory councils shall be authorized to—

(a) Find, adjudicate, and declare that such an emergency exists on account of the basic commodity handled by such council selling below its real value, or the price thereof declining so as to soon drop below the real value thereof, and notify the corporation of the desire of the council and the producers to borrow money under the provisions of this act, and of the decision of such council to withdraw from market and sale all such commodity in the United States under the contract set out in section 11, and keep such commodity off the market and not expose same for sale until such time as there is a reasonable demand for it and the commodity can be sold at a price ample to protect the corporation and producers thereof as set out in subdivision (i) of section 8 of this act.

(b) Determine and notify the corporation of the amount to be advanced on each pound, bushel, or other unit of the commodity.

(c) Determine the manner of storage and safeguarding of commodities while hypothecated or withdrawn from sale and market. The council, so far as practicable and safe, shall give preference to the storage by individual farmers of their own products under sufficient and proper requirements as to insurance, protection against theft, and deterioration.

(d) Determine the amount of reduction necessary by the producers for the next year of the commodity handled by such council to prevent the existence of an unprofitable surplus at and after next harvesting season. Notice of this decision shall be given the corporation, the banks, and other parties handling discounts in connection with said commodity, and through said banks or organizations to the producers as set out in their contracts with the corporation.

(e) Investigate and determine when the council shall under this act authorize for sale all or part of said commodity so as to protect the corporation and the producer. The advisory council may authorize a sale of all or part of a commodity under contract and permit sales so long as the designated price is secured, with a proviso that no sale shall be under the price authorized and that all authority to sell shall be withdrawn in the event the price of the commodity drops below the price fixed and determined by the council. The wishes of the producers shall be followed so far as possible in determination of which farmers' commodity goes on the market first.

(f) Determine which commodity shall be sold from time to time and notify the banks handling the discount on such commodity that the commodity is to be placed on sale.

(g) Keep an accurate account of the amount and location of the commodity under contract in the United States and whether or not same is hypothecated to secure an advance from the corporation and the amount of the advance, and generally to do any and all things necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act.

(h) Employ and pay such help, agents, and employees as may be necessary to carry into effect this act, and require statements and data from the corporation, banks, other organizations and producers, give in detail information helpful to the council in the discharge of its duties under this act.

(i) Have printed and mailed, free of postage, such correspondence, leaflets, and printed matter as is necessary in the discharge of its official duties.

(j) Secure and pay for such office and assembly space as may be necessary in the discharge of the functions of the council.

(k) Negotiate and secure contracts with the banks, fertilizer dealers, and other farm-supply dealers whereby additional time for payment of indebtedness due by farmers will be secured in the event said advisory council finds it necessary to withdraw from the market any farm commodity under this act.

(l) Extend in every way possible the use and marketability of the farm commodity handled by the council.

SEC. 11. The contract heretofore referred to in this act, which shall be made by producers as herein provided in order for them to become eligible for loans by the corporation through bankers, trust companies, and farm organizations, shall be as follows, to wit:

We, the undersigned producers of one of the basic agricultural commodities, specifically named as such in the farmers' finance corporation act passed by the Seventieth Congress of the United States, in consideration of (a) the benefits flowing and to flow to us under the terms of said act; (b) the obligations on the part of the corporation, the various advisory councils authorized under said act, and the banks, bankers, trust companies, and farm organizations named therein to help me and my fellow farmer growers of said basic agricultural commodity or commodities finance the marketing of said products; (c) the contract and agreement of all of these by, with, and between themselves and all parties of the United States who have or may sign a contract identical to this; (d) as well as in consideration of one dollar to each in hand paid to the other, do hereby jointly and severally agree, contract, and covenant by and with said corporation, banks, bankers, trust companies, farm organizations, said advisory councils by and with each signer of this or identical contract or agreement that we and each of us will stand to and abide by and keep inviolate the decisions and rulings of the farmers' (name of commodity) advisory council authorized by this act, and furthermore specifically agree—

(a) That regardless of whether I or we secure a loan under the farmers' finance corporation act, not to sell or offer for sale contrary to the rulings of said council, any commodity on which a loan is authorized by the corporation under the act, as a result of this contract, and hereby admit that such a sale would subject me or us to 30 per cent of the sale price as liquidated damages to be due and collectible by the farmers' finance corporation for the use and benefit of the signers of this contract who do not violate same, and hereby agree to pay said damages in the event of such a breach.

(b) That, regardless of whether I or we borrow money under the provisions of this act, I or we will from year to year during the life of this contract make such curtailments of the acreage planted by me or us in the basic commodity on which a loan is authorized under this contract by said corporation as may be determined by the advisory council as fair, just, and equitable in order not to have on hand an unmarketable surplus at and after the time of harvest of said crop, and I or we agree that any surplus produced by my or our planting an acreage in excess of that authorized by said advisory council shall become the property of the farmers' finance corporation for the use and benefit of my or our fellow farmers who make the curtailment as per this contract.

(c) Any notice given to the bank, banker, trust company, or farm organization through or from which I or we secure or am or are entitled to secure advances on the commodity grown by me or us under this contract shall be construed, and is hereby accepted, as notice to me or us of any and all decisions, rulings, and orders of the said advisory council. I or we hereby accept and approve as my or our bank for this purpose the ——— of ——— County, State of ———. If for any reason I or we desire to change my or our designation of bank, I or we will do so by notifying the advisory council in writing of such change.

(d) The curtailments of acreage herein provided for by the advisory council shall be fair and the same percentage shall be required of all farmers signing this contract.

(e) The life of this contract shall be for the full end and term of two years from the date growers planting 75 per cent of said product for the ensuing year have signed this or an identical contract, and shall have no binding force or effect upon me or any of us when there is not a sufficient number of growers as parties to the same to require the corporation to make loans as set out in the farmers' finance corporation act.

SEC. 12. The contract referred to in subdivision (b) of section 8 shall be as follows, to wit:

The undersigned bank, banker, trust company, or farm organization for a valuable consideration do hereby agree by and with the farmers' finance corporation, authorized and created by Congress, that we will lend our aid and encouragement to the farmers who borrow money from us or through us from the corporation, in their efforts to obey and keep the instructions and orders of the commodity advisory councils, and to this end will loan all farmers made eligible by said act to receive loans the full amount authorized by said commodity council, charging only 1 per cent more interest than is charged us by the corporation. It being agreed that the farmers' finance corporation is to buy said loans promptly upon request by us and the same is to be transferred without recourse except that we agree to act as agents whenever required in the collection of said loans when payment is offered at our bank. We furthermore agree that all money so collected, as well as any money advanced to use to loan to the farmers under said act shall be trust funds and shall be held by us only as the agent of the corporation.

We agree to make said commodity loans only on inspections made by authority of the advisory council and to make such reports of our actings and doings in this connection as may be required from time to time by the corporation and the advisory council. We agree to keep on file for inspection all the orders, rulings, and decisions of the council and to give such publicity through the press as is required and paid for by the council. The life of this contract shall be for such time as operations continue under the farmers' finance corporation act, and loans made through our bank are outstanding and unpaid.

SEC. 13. The directors of the farmers' finance corporation herein provided for may not be appointed until 75 per cent of the producers of some basic commodity have either signed the contract provided for in section 11, or it is clearly evident that said percentage will sign said contract. The members of the commodity councils appointed by the governors of the basic commodity States as herein provided are authorized and empowered to carry forward the work of securing signatures of producers to the contract set out in section 11, so as to bring this act into full force and effect, make the appointment of the directors necessary, and to bring about full operation hereunder.

SEC. 14. There is hereby appropriated $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in payment to said advisory councils for their per diem allowances, expenses, office rent, and other expenses incurred by them in advising the farmers of their rights under this act and securing signatures to said contract, and generally doing the things necessary to bring this act into full force and effect, provided a sufficient number of producers approve of the plan herein authorized.

SEC. 15. The respective commodity advisory councils in their efforts to secure signatures to said contracts and thus organize the farmers so as to solve the overproduction problem are authorized to pay for such publicity in the press and otherwise as they may find necessary and make such arrangements as they may decide proper with banks, county officials, and others to hold contracts for signatures and explain the purposes of the contract and of this act.

SEC. 16. That after operations as to any particular commodity begin under this act, the farmers who have signed the contract set out in section 11 may organize themselves into an organization of producers of said commodity in which all signers of said contract may, if they wish, take part without the payment of compulsory fees or charges, except on a vote of three-fourths of the members and such organization, if consisting of 75 per cent of the signers of said contract as to any particular commodity, may select or elect the successors of the members of the advisory council as to the particular commodity, thus supplanting the selection of the same by the governors of the commodity-growing States.

SEC. 17. The rate of interest charged by the corporation shall not exceed 6 per cent per annum, and all money arising from interest and all other sources, except repayment of principal, shall be held by the corporation as a reserve fund or surplus.

SEC. 18. The corporation shall from time to time make such advances to the advisory councils as may be certified by the chairman and secretary of the council as necessary to pay per diem and other charges due members of the council and expenses, salaries, and wages incurred in the discharge of the duties of the council.

SEC. 19. Advances for said purposes shall be made by the corporation to the advisory councils as loans when there are not sufficient funds for said purposes in the reserve or surplus fund, and shall be repaid with interest at 4½ per cent per annum whenever said reserve or surplus fund is sufficient for said purpose.

SEC. 20. Cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, hogs, and cattle are hereby designated as basic agricultural commodities, and as such entitled to the benefits of this act. The corporation may, upon proper showing, determine that any other farm, orchard, grove, dairy, or timber product is a basic agricultural commodity and entitled to loans under this act.

SEC. 21. Subject to the provisions and exceptions heretofore made, the corporation shall purchase all loans on basic agricultural commodities offered and shall require no security for said loans other than a first lien on the commodity so offered, and renew and carry said loans so long as the advisory council holds said commodity off the market. Said loans shall only be collectible out of the money arising from the sale of the same.

SEC. 22. In the event a commodity should not bring enough when sold to pay the loan held by the corporation, no claim shall be held or enforced against the producer except the said balance and 4 per cent interest thereon may be collected in future loan transactions from the particular producer out of any balance that may be due him after paying off loans, interest, and other charges in connection with such future loans.

SEC. 23. The corporation shall charge all losses against the reserve or surplus fund which arises from interest, profits, and other sources other than from the collection of the principal.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced for reference to the Ways and Means Committee House bill 1, the tax reduction bill. The income-tax title, as explained in the committee report, has been arranged in accordance with the recommendation of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. In order that the Members may readily find the sections of the old law from which the sections of the bill have been taken and also find where the sections of the old law appear in the new bill, I have prepared two parallel reference tables containing this information and ask unanimous consent that these tables be printed at the end of the bill for the information of the Members, so that they will have that information right along with the bill itself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman to state that that was bill No. 1. If the gentleman is just introducing that bill to-day, how does it come to be numbered 1? There were some 4,000 bills introduced yesterday. Was there some sort of arrangement that this particular bill should carry that number?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think there was a sort of understanding that it should carry that number. I did not have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is immaterial, but it occurred to me that it is not a very good practice to have a bill introduced to-day numbered 1, when as a matter of fact we know that hundreds of bills were introduced yesterday. It does not seem to me that it is good practice to have the numbers running in that way.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the Clerk of the House understood that the bill would be introduced yesterday, but as a matter of fact it turned out to be absolutely impossible to put it into the basket yesterday.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman, of course, knows that lots of bills were prepared beforehand and given to the Clerk, and arrangements were made for numbers to be given to some bills. I have no such bills myself, but I understood that such an arrangement was made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection at all to the arrangement or plan whereby this bill should carry the number 1, but it does strike me as getting us rather crisscrossed here to have this bill come in to-day and then to carry the number 1.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think there is something in what the gentleman says. The original intention was that the bill should be introduced yesterday, but unfortunately that was not possible.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For the information of Members interested I ask the gentleman if he can tell the House when we will reach the consideration of this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think next Friday morning.

Mr. BROWNING. When will the bill be ready for Members to have copies of it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To-morrow morning Members can have copies of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Rather than set such a very bad precedent would not the gentleman be willing to ask that this bill be dated December 5 instead of December 6?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, that would be wrong.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that would be a worse practice than the other.

Mr. BLANTON. Here we have a bill numbered 1, dated December 6, and a bill numbered 2 will be dated December 5. It sets a very bad precedent in my judgment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I assure the gentleman it will not happen again.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MEMBER EXCUSED FROM ATTENDANCE

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. ROYAL C. JOHNSON] is ill at a hospital, and I ask unanimous consent that he may be excused from attendance on the House while he is unable to attend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is evident there will be no business reported from any committee to be considered on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-morrow be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Connecticut to indulge me by recalling that two years ago on the second Tuesday in the session when a similar request was made I laid before the House the figures concerning the treatment of Calendar Wednesday in the previous Congress, showing that 61 committees might have been reached on Calendar Wednesday in the course of two years, and that only 23 were in fact reached. There were 35 days on which committees might have had an opportunity to be heard. Of these, only 21 were used and they by only 15 committees of the House. A colloquy followed between the gentleman from Connecticut and myself, in the course of which he said that—

> If the occasion arises when we can not consider a bill on Calendar Wednesday that properly should be considered, the Rules Committee can take care of it.

The word "properly" is the crux of the matter. Who shall decide what is proper? It gives me the basis for pointing out to the gentleman from Connecticut that there has been no substantial change in the situation. I have not refreshed my memory but, as I recall it, in the recent Congress, as in the one before, only about one-third of the committees had their day in court. This interested me as chairman of one of the tail-end committees and as a member of another of the tail-end committees, chairman of a subcommittee reporting the hospital construction bill, one of some magnitude and importance. The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation under the present routine has no opportunity of exercising its own judgment as to what veterans' bills shall be considered.

When I came here eight years ago there was still some recognition of what evidently had been thought of as the sanctity of Calendar Wednesday. If the gentleman will look through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the first few years after its adoption he will observe that the whole House was evidently insistent upon the observance of the principle involved in the creation of that institution. For the last few years it has fallen into, shall I say innocuous desuetude?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will yield there, I think he is mistaken. I think in the early days of this Calendar Wednesday rule it did fall almost into innocuous desuetude by the practice of one committee occupying the time for practically all of the Wednesdays of the session, and that later the rule was amended so that a committee could take only two Wednesdays.

Mr. LUCE. But the gentleman will find in the RECORD repeated statements by Speaker Clark as to what the House meant to have accomplished and thought it finally did accomplish. I am personally of the opinion that it was a wise accomplishment. The opinion of the gentleman from Connecticut differs from mine in this regard. He is of the opinion that generally, in the mass, there is too much legislation. I am of the opinion that we disappoint the country because we do not achieve the things that it desires, and I would call his attention to the fact of our failure to accomplish what the people desire in these recent years in the solution of such problems as those of Muscle Shoals, of Boulder Dam, of the disposition of alien property, and of the French spoliation claims; and I could add largely to the list.

Mr. TILSON. None of these matters would be considered on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. LUCE. Nevertheless my point is still of importance, as I think, that Calendar Wednesday should be made to serve its useful purpose. I respect the gentleman's judgment, and I trust that he will respect mine. In ancient times there was a city whose king made provision whereby for one day in the year all the slaves should have opportunity to say and to do what they chose, so that during the rest of the year they might follow their pursuits in contentment. [Laughter.]

I do not desire to intimate that the committees on the tail end of the list are in a state of servitude, but I do hold that each might well have one day in the year on which to lay its views before the House.

Two-thirds of the committees are now never reached. I think it grossly unfair that one-third of the committees should have the opportunity to exercise their judgment as to what matters the House should consider while the other two-thirds of the committees are denied that opportunity. In other words, "what is sauce for the goose should be sauce also for the gander." Either this rule should be abolished or it should be observed. If the gentleman from Connecticut desires the abolition of the rule, we could properly consider that; but if the rule is to be maintained, I contend that the tail-end committees in the exercise of ordinary fair play ought to have their day in court, and ought not to be precluded from it by suspensions of the rule.

Now, one more statement. Of course, there is no business to-morrow. As was pointed out to the gentleman two years ago by Mr. CANNON, of Missouri, it has been repeatedly held that this request is not necessary, because if no business presents itself on Calendar Wednesday none can be brought up. However, I do not object now to the gentleman's request for unanimous consent. I have taken the floor merely to bring to the attention of the House the fact that there are gentlemen in the House who are so zealous in their committee work and so anxious that the product of the labors they perform should have opportunity for consideration that the gentleman from Connecticut must not be surprised if, in this session, objection should be made to requests for the suspension of Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman realizes that if he now makes his objection, to-morrow the Speaker will direct the Clerk to call the committees, and the list will be called through. It will also be chalked up to the effect that all the committees have been reached once at this session. Therefore I asked unanimous consent that to-morrow's Calendar Wednesday business be dispensed with on that account. To carry out all that the gentleman from Massachusetts wishes us to do, it would be necessary to start a movement to revolutionize the calendar, so that there will be more Wednesdays in the week and so that most of the time should be devoted to the business of Calendar Wednesday. This would be necessary, I am sure, if we are to consider all of the bills that all of the committees of this Congress might report.

Mr. LUCE. I do not now insist in the matter. I said before that I would not object to the present request.

Mr. TILSON. I was calling attention to the inconvenience of calling the committees to-morrow.

Mr. LUCE. I realize that perfectly. I withdraw my reservation of the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill which I introduced yesterday to provide for a department of education.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to say that as a Member of Congress during the last nine years I have watched closely the movement for a department of education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet. The more I study the question the more am I convinced of the great need for the proposed department. In 1923 and again in 1925 I had the honor of introducing in this House bills providing for such a department. I am proud again to introduce the measure with slight changes as House bill 7, believing that if it should be passed the educational and economic benefits resulting therefrom would add immeasurably to the progress of our Nation.

Almost continuously since as early as 1857 there has been before our country the proposal and need for this department. We are now beginning to realize more than ever before the wastes in funds and the losses in civic betterment and in material advancement that result from failure to establish a national clearing house for education.

Changing national conditions have made education of more and more importance, so that it is now one of our greatest national interests. During the past six years, in which I have been a member of the Education Committee of the House, the need for proper national recognition of education has become increasingly apparent. From the beginning of my membership in the committee this matter has been a live issue. It has been the subject of considerable newspaper and magazine comment, it has been debated from coast to coast, and it has gained the support not only of educators but a large number of influential national organizations of more general character. At the hearings on the various educational bills that have been before Congress during my term of office, the arguments for and against the proposal for a department of education have been presented from every angle, but I have been gratified to find that the preponderance of testimony has been in favor of the new department.

RECOGNITION OF EDUCATION IS A NATIONAL NEED

The Congress of the United States never has created a Cabinet office overnight. In every case, a new department has been established only after changing events have demonstrated a national need. Only the first three Cabinet offices—those of State (first known as Foreign Affairs), War, and Treasury—were created without great discussion, and these had already been in existence for some time under the Continental Congress when the Constitution was adopted. Every subsequent addition to the Cabinet has been made only after lengthy discussion. Searching inquiry has already been made into the question of establishing a department of education, and the need for it has been strikingly evident for a long time. There is a growing conviction that we have been omitting from the President's Cabinet a division as fundamental to national prosperity as the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture.

In 1789, when the first Congress met, following the adoption of the Constitution, the ever-popular argument was begun as to the number of departments to be established. Suggestions of a "home" or Interior Department were met by the charge that the new office was unnecessary. Growing population and expanding territory, with their accompanying complications of national life, finally brought about establishment of this department in 1849, 60 years after interest was first shown in it. At this time the Cabinet included a Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster General, in addition to the Secretaries of the three original departments. "Interior" was a rather indefinite term, though more full of meaning 80 years ago, when the prairie States were still frontier country, than to-day. Because of the uncertainty as to the exact application of "interior," the new department was assigned unwanted duties by the other overcrowded departments, which sloughed off unassimilable interests. In 1869, when the independent department of education, which had been created two years earlier under a commissioner, was reduced to a bureau, it was included within the Department of the Interior. There it remains, national recognition of this important matter of education being made only through the Department of the Interior—a department so overcrowded with a variety of unrelated matters that it is altogether improbable that a Secretary of the Interior should be chosen primarily for his interest in education.

THE EFFECT OF CHANGING ECONOMIC CONDITIONS ON EDUCATION

Even greater changes in our national life have taken place within the memory of present generations than those which led up to the creation of the Department of the Interior. Not only has our territory been developed and expanded, not only has our population grown, but our industrial life has been revolutionized.

To-day we are traveling in high-powered automobiles, on speedy trains, by steamboat, and even in airplanes; we communicate with distant points by telegraph, telephone, and radio; but only a comparatively small percentage of our schools have made equal progress. Despite the fact that the past 25 years have seen a great improvement in school practices, education is not keeping pace with the scientific developments of our age. The result is enormous waste and loss. For elimination of such loss and the preservation of our free American educational institutions creation of a department of education has become a matter of great national concern.

Progress in industry has not been the result of a happy accident but has followed years of serious study. A recent survey lists more than 1,000 research laboratories carrying on investigations in industrial problems, in addition to the numerous research bureaus operated by National, State, or municipal governments. The work of these industrial laboratories, where of general interest and application, is compiled and disseminated by the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture, just as I hope soon to see a department of education carrying on investigations of educational questions and disseminating much-needed information about the findings of progressive schools throughout the country.

In pleading for funds for the Walter Hines Page School at Johns Hopkins University in February, 1925, Owen Young, chairman of the General Electric Co., made a significant statement illustrating my point. He said in part:

> Facts can be applied in any field. Our curse is ignorance. Facts are our scarcest raw material. This is shown by the economy with which we use them. One has to dig deep for them, because they are as difficult to get as they are precious to have.

Facts are just as necessary for education as for industry. Rather than diminishing as our country grows older, our need of educational facts and our public responsibility toward the schools is constantly increasing. To-day the problems of training our 27,000,000 school children and eliminating adult illiteracy are much greater than were the educational questions faced by the Continental Congress when it passed the ordinance of 1787, declaring that "religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall be forever encouraged."

The influence of changing economic conditions is being felt strongly in education. Speaking before the department of superintendence of the National Education Association last year, Secretary of Commerce Hoover gave recognition to this fact when he said:

> A century of scientific discovery has vastly increased the complexities of our national life. It has given us new and more complicated tools by which we have gained enormously in productivity and in standards of living. It has vastly increased the opportunities for men and women to attain that position to which their abilities and character entitle them. It has necessitated a high degree of specialization, more education, and skill. It has greatly reduced the amount of human sweat. It has given the adult a greater leisure which should be devoted to some further education. It has prolonged the period and widened the chance for the schooling of children. And from it all your responsibilities have become infinitely greater and more complex, for you must fit each oncoming generation for this changing scene.

To meet "this changing scene" school officials need the help of scientific investigations, undertaken on a national scale.

THE BUREAU'S SERVICE IS HELPFUL BUT INADEQUATE

No one realizes more acutely the restrictions placed on the Bureau of Education by lack of funds than does Commissioner John J. Tigert. Testifying at the hearings before the Joint Congressional Committee on Reorganization of the Executive Departments in January, 1924, he predicted:

> The Bureau of Education very shortly will be of practically no service to the educational interests of the country, because of the fact that it is so neglected and has gone along so long with inadequate facilities and is such a very small, meagerly supported organization that it is not in a position to-day to attack the great problems in research that are needed to promote education in this country.

Under a commissioner the needs of education must be presented to Congress through the Secretary of the Interior, the Director of the Budget, and the President. While the present Secretary of the Interior has shown himself greatly interested in education, the manifold subjects that come under the direction of this official will always prevent him from giving first attention to this matter. In my opinion, there can be no remedy for this condition other than the establishment of a department of education.

Such a department would make possible more effective and more economical administration of the many educational activities now carried on by various departments of our Government. Under a provision of House bill 7 such educational work of the Federal Government as might logically be brought together would be coordinated in a department of education. This would transfer to the new department the work now carried on by the Bureau of Education, the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Howard University, and the Columbia Institution for the Deaf.

ADVISORY COUNCIL OF STATE SUPERINTENDENTS AUTHORIZED

The bill would likewise make possible the correlation of other Federal educational activities, through the interdepartmental conference on education provided by the measure, and the cooperation of the National and State departments of education through the creation of a national advisory council, to include the State superintendent of education or other chief educational official of every State and Territory in the United States. This council would constitute a clearing house for educational information. Its members would present to the secretary of education the outstanding educational needs in the various States, while they, in turn, would be offered suggestions for the promotion of education, based upon the research and investigations of the department. Since the recommendations of the secretary could never be mandatory, his influence would depend upon the soundness of his advice and the strength and wisdom of his leadership.

Without in any way changing the control of education from the State and local authorities now administering the schools, the department of education would be able to serve the States by conducting research into problems common to a number of States. Many educational questions are of such magnitude that their investigation by State agencies is impossible, while, even if undertaken by individual States, the prohibitive expense and the resulting duplication of effort would make such a procedure impracticable.

The exchange of ideas made possible through the annual meeting of the council, however, represents, in my opinion, the chief benefit to be derived from the provisions of section 10 of the bill. Great surveys in the field of education now are being conducted here, there, and everywhere. All these investigations, while of varying importance, contain something of value to teachers in every section of the country, but at present means is lacking for their coordination and dissemination. A channel for the distribution of such information would be provided by the council of superintendents, while the department of education would constitute the best possible agency for compiling this data.

Above all else, a department of education would benefit from having the leadership of a Cabinet member. A Commissioner of Education may be ever so well fitted for his position, as most of the men holding this office have been, but the very fact that he is a bureau commissioner rather than a department secretary deprives him of that prestige which is required for maximum effectiveness. Leadership, such as only a secretary could exercise, is needed for the task of giving national encouragement to education. It is necessary if teachers and school authorities are to give that voluntary cooperation which is required in the collection of research findings and reports. It is just as necessary if the approval of the public is to be gained and popular interest in education stimulated.

OPPOSITION TO CABINET REPRESENTATION FOR AGRICULTURE IS RECALLED

Prior to establishment of the Department of Agriculture in 1862 and during the next 27 years until agriculture was elevated to an executive department with Cabinet ranking, the same arguments were raised as are being brought out to-day with regard to education.

When Congress first considered placing the commissioner of the independent Department of Agriculture in the President's Cabinet unthinking people were inclined to belittle Federal research and to oppose the movement on State-rights grounds. Addressing his colleagues in the Forty-seventh Congress in 1882, when the claim was advanced that States could carry on any necessary agricultural experiments, making Federal research useless, Representative D. Wyatt Aiken, of South Carolina, replied in unmistakable terms. His statement, doubly interesting to-day because of its application to the questions involved in establishment of a department of education, follows:

> I think it is a sufficiently satisfactory reply to say that no State has ever made such an effort, no State is now proposing to undertake such a task, and probably no State ever will endeavor to accomplish such results; and if each and all the States were to attempt severally to effect these purposes there would be no uniformity of results, no general diffusion of the knowledge acquired, and consequently no general welfare of the people produced. The geographical area of this country is too vast and the interests of this people are too diversified to expect any individual State to be responsible for developments that promote the general welfare of the country. The moral power of the Federal Government must be the focus whence radiates the means of securing this industrial progress. * * *
> Why can not a commissioner be as potent to this end as a secretary? * * * It is not simply a change of name we desire, but it is an elevation of rank and official position. * * * The forces of the North, South, East, and West demand this elevation, believing that the enactment into law of the provisions of this bill will in no wise infringe any man's constitutional rights nor impede his progress in the business of life and the pursuit of happiness. It will inhibit no State-rights doctrine nor centralize the power of the Federal Government, but will give just recognition and promotion to our grandest industry, which requires the daily toil of more than half of our entire population. * * * It is nothing new to make a Cabinet minister or an executive department in this Government when either the needs or the interest of the country require it.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF EXISTING FEDERAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES FULLY ESTABLISHED

Authorization for creation of the Department of Agriculture and later of the Departments of Commerce and Labor was found in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, which provides that the Federal Government may levy taxes for the general welfare, as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

This clause has given rise to much controversy, but the interpretation given to it by Story in his great work on the Constitution has been followed by Congress in practice since the Government went into operation. As Story observes, the clause should be read as follows:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare, of the United States; the common defense and general welfare and the payment of the public debts being the ends for which the power is conferred, and taxation a means for their attainment.

This is the interpretation placed on this clause by Hamilton in 1791, in his Report on Manufactures, who stated it as his clear opinion that the phrase "general welfare"— is as comprehensive as any that could have been used—

there seems no reason to doubt that whatever concerns the general interests of learning, of agriculture, of manufacturers, and of commerce, are within the sphere of the national councils as far as regards an application of money, the only qualification of the generality of the phrase in question which seems to be admissible is this: That the object to which an appropriation of money is to be made must be general and not local, its operation extending in fact, or by possibility, throughout the Union and not being confined to any particular spot.

President Monroe in an elaborate and cogent paper entitled, "Views of the President of the United States on the subject of material improvements," submitted with his veto in 1822 of the Cumberland road bill, took the same view. His attitude is expressed in the following sentence:

My idea is that Congress have an unlimited power to raise money, and that in its appropriation they have a discretionary power, restricted only by the duty to appropriate it to the purposes of common defense and of general, not local, national, not State, benefit.

Since the Civil War there has been no President who denied the right of Congress to raise and appropriate money for purposes of general welfare because such purposes were not within the fields in which Congress is, by other provisions of the Constitution, empowered to legislate.

The appropriations made annually since 1862 for the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the Bureau of Mines, and the Bureau of Fisheries can find no justification except under a power to raise and spend money for "the general welfare."

It will be noted, too, that by the Adams Act, the Smith-Lever Act, the Smith-Hughes Act, Congress has made appropriations of large sums of money raised by general taxation for the advancement of education throughout the country.

In establishing a department of education, therefore, the Congress would simply be following a long-established precedent. Besides, our Government is already engaged in education. In addition to funds for the Bureau of Education, more than 30 separate appropriations for educational activities are now made annually by the Federal Government, but many of these activities could be taken over by the new department. The policy of making land grants to the States for public schools and universities was begun by the land act of 1785, reaffirmed in 1787, and extended by the Morrill Act of 1862. This has resulted in the States receiving approximately 150,000 square miles of public lands for school purposes in addition to thousands of square miles of so-called swamp lands, the proceeds of which in many cases have been used for schools.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE DIRECTS ATTENTION TO EDUCATION

Our national responsibility toward education was given consideration in the annual message of the President at the opening of the Seventieth Congress, on December 6, 1927, when he recognized in striking terms the need for creation of a department of education and relief. Such a department was included in the proposal for the reorganization of the executive departments of the Government, first presented to Congress in 1923.

In his annual message of that year Mr. Coolidge gave his approval to the plan for a department of education and relief, and on July 4, 1924, addressing the annual convention of the National Education Association at Washington, D. C., he reiterated his opinion that such a department would be beneficial to the country. Reorganization was again recommended by the President in his annual messages of December, 1924, and 1925, but this year in his message to the Seventieth Congress, December 6, 1927, he omitted mention of general reorganization and centered attention on the reorganization of the Federal educational activities in the following words:

For many years it has been the policy of the Federal Government to encourage and foster the cause of education. Large sums of money are annually appropriated to carry on vocational training. Many millions go into agricultural schools. The general subject is under the immediate direction of a Commissioner of Education. While this subject is strictly a State and local function, it should continue to have the encouragement of the National Government. I am still of the opinion that much good could be accomplished through the establishment of a department of education and relief, into which would be gathered all of these functions under one directing member of the Cabinet.

In spite of our Government's fundamental interest in education, in spite of compulsory education laws and free tax-supported schools, we have in our country a higher percentage of illiteracy than any of the other leading nations. The census places 6 per cent of the population of the United States in this class. Even this figure does not indicate the real state of affairs, for practically everyone who has attended school, no matter for how brief a period, is listed in the census as literate. A more practical record of actual conditions was brought out by the examination of drafted men during the World War, when it was found that at least one-fourth of our young men were unable either to read a newspaper intelligently or to write a letter in English. Such a situation makes education a matter of national as well as State concern.

STATE AND LOCAL CONTROL OF SCHOOLS GUARANTEED UNDER THE CONSTITUTION

From the earliest days of our Republic education has been encouraged by our National Government, but control of the schools is a State matter, guaranteed so by the tenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, which reads:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

Nevertheless, just as was the case 60 years ago, when the department of education was first established, though only temporarily, the chief argument of the opposition is that the right of the States and local communities to administer their schools would be infringed upon by the creation of such a unit in the Government. On the contrary, a department of education, as provided in House Resolution 7, rather than interfering with the present control of either public or private schools, would result in a great stimulation of interest in education and would be of the greatest benefit to State and local school officials. Through the work of the department information regarding the best school practices developed from coast to coast would be compiled and made available for educators everywhere, whether in public or private institutions. Though expanding the work now carried on by the Bureau of Education, the new department would continue to serve the same democratic purpose for which the bureau was organized, and in so doing would preserve all of the rights of the States in educational matters and make available to all the benefits offered by the department's studies.

Distribution of information has been accepted as a national function and is now carried on successfully in agriculture, commerce, and labor, but it is greatly neglected so far as our schools are concerned—neglected in spite of the fact that a fourth of our population, either as pupils or teachers, is constantly engaged in the one enterprise of education. To give that fourth of our people deserved recognition and to insure the future welfare of our Nation, to make more effective the greatest instrument for establishing and perpetuating our democratic form of Government, to hasten the removal of illiteracy, and to bring together the most sound educational facts bearing upon our industrial, commercial, and intellectual welfare, a department of education is essential.

REPAIR OF NAVAL SHIPS

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on an item in the deficiency appropriation bill for the repair and reconditioning of ships.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is an item in the deficiency appropriation bill for the repair and the elevation of the guns on two battleships, and in my 10 minutes' time I am going to ask the Clerk to read a resolution which I desire the membership of the House to hear.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 42

Whereas legislation has been enacted into a law authorizing the expenditure of $13,500,000 for the elevation of guns and the reconditioning of the battleships U. S. S. Oklahoma and U. S. S. Nevada; and

Whereas out of this sum it is proposed to expend $940,000 for the elevation of guns and $1,740,000 for alterations and repairs which are reported to provide new officers' quarters on said ships; and

Whereas it is claimed that such an expenditure will violate the spirit of the disarmament conference, set a precedent for the expenditure of more than $100,000,000, and cause a reconstruction program which will probably affect every ship of this type in the world: Therefore be it

Resolved, That before any money shall be appropriated for this purpose the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint from the membership of the House a select committee of seven members for the Seventieth Congress, and which said committee is hereby authorized and directed to make a complete inspection of such ships and to obtain estimates from outside authorities as to the cost of any repairs that might be needed on said ships and such other additions as are estimated for in the schedule of items reported to the Naval Affairs Committee.

For the purpose of said inquiry the committee, or any subcommittee designated by it, shall have the power to send for persons and papers, administer oaths or affirmations, to take testimony, to sit during the sessions of the House or during any recess of the House, and may hold its sessions at such places as the committee may determine.

Such committee shall have the right at any time to report to the House in one or more reports the result of its inquiry, with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

That the committee shall have the right to employ such experts as may be needed in making this investigation.

The Speaker is hereby empowered to issue subpœnas to witnesses upon the request of the chairman of said committee at any time, including any recess of the House, during the inquiry of the committee; and the Sergeant at Arms is hereby empowered and directed to serve all subpœnas and other processes transferred to him by the said committee.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the resolution just read be referred to the Committee on Rules. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, that is not necessary. It would go to the Committee on Rules if it were dropped in the basket.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I thank the gentleman. I just wanted the House to know that since the convening of the last session of Congress the minds of the American people have undergone a great change with respect to the usefulness of battleships. The President of the United States has just called attention in his message to Congress to what is needed in the way of additions, additions to aircraft, submarines, and cruisers, but nothing was said with respect to battleships. There is no one who can successfully make the statement that the expenditure of $13,500,000 will render these two battleships any more efficient than they are at the present moment in an engagement with aircraft. Therefore, if we are going to expend huge sums of money for our national defense, let us put the money where it will do some real good and not appropriate in the deficiency bill millions of dollars to recondition a couple of old ships that can not be utilized in any modern war with any major nation, and such an authorization would establish a precedent for the expenditure of approximately $100,000,000. For that reason I am bringing it to the attention of the House at this time, and for the additional reason that the deficiency appropriation bill will probably be brought in here to-morrow with some $6,500,000 for the purpose named in my resolution. Such a waste of public money should not be countenanced by this Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am not directing my remarks to the subject matter. If the gentleman does not propose to drop the resolution in the basket and have it referred in the usual way, then in order to be printed it will have to be taken out of the RECORD by the bill clerk.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I thank the gentleman. I only asked permission that when it was introduced it be referred to the Committee on Rules, where it rightfully belongs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 7, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate Resolution 1, by Mr. NORRIS, opposing the seating of FRANK L. SMITH as a Senator from the State of Illinois.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, during the brief years of my service here I have been called upon on three different occasions to consider charges against Senators elect involving the improper use of money in elections; that is, with reference to three different Senators. It is the most unwelcome incident which can come up in the duties of a Senator. In one of those instances the Senator was finally denied his seat. In another the Senator, after a vote, retained his seat. In the last instance the Senator resigned in the face of what seemed almost certain exclusion. In one of the instances the amount expended in the primary, if I recall the figures correctly, was between $125,000 and $130,000. In the other case it was something like $195,000. I voted in each instance against the Senator retaining his seat.

What I have to say to-day is not indicative of my views upon the cases now before us when they shall be presented in the manner in which I feel they ought to be presented to the Senate; that is to say, when the course of procedure shall have been disposed of, my position upon the merits of the controversy is yet to be announced. What I have to say at this time relates alone to the rights of the parties in presenting this far-reaching controversy.

No contest with which I am familiar has raised more interesting or more important questions than the controversies now before us. Almost every question which could possibly be of concern to the Senate in discharging its duty under the Constitution arises in connection with these two controversies.

The power which the Senate has over its Members is very great. When we are acting under Article I, section 5, clause 1 of the Constitution, I do not know of any limitation on the power of the Senate save and except the judgment and the conscience of the Senate.

Not only, Mr. President, is our power great and our jurisdiction wide, but the controversy, in the way in which it must inevitably be presented, brings forward about as delicate a question as could be before the Senate under any circumstances. An individual comes here bearing the credentials of his State, and the Senate assumes and has the authority to pass upon his fitness to occupy a place in this Chamber. It assumes and has the authority to pass upon the regularity of his election. It amounts to this, that it is really a controversy between the State and the Federal Government or, in my opinion, more specifically speaking, between the people and the Senate; this is about as grave a situation as could be presented. When the Senate assumes to say that the man whom the State has chosen has not been chosen properly or that he is disqualified to sit, it is exercising a power than which there is none more hazardous for it to exert under the Constitution. When the voters have spoken by their votes, made their approval, it is a serious thing to say you have selected your Senator, but we reject him. I do not doubt our power, but in the exercise of such stupendous power there is carried a solemn admonition that it should be exercised with due regard and with due respect for the rights of all parties.

These two controversies arise out of what is claimed to have been the improper use of money in the primaries; and the first question which logically presents itself is what power, what authority, has the Senate to deal with primaries, or what authority has Congress to deal with them, and what relation does the primary bear to the election upon which we must pass under Article I, section 5 of the Constitution? It has been contended, and it is still contended, that the primary is so detached and distinct from the election that it can have no bearing upon the validity of the election; that while it might be that the conduct of a candidate in a primary would be of such immoral nature as to disqualify him to sit as a Senator, yet, as a part of the machinery of election, the primary is so dissociated from the election proper that it could not be regarded, even if corrupt, as having tainted the title growing out of the election.

With that proposition, Mr. President, I am wholly unable to agree. I think the most important question before the Senate in connection with these controversies is the power and authority of the Senate and of the Congress over primaries. There is a certain element of injustice, not to say chaos, if the Senate or if the Congress has the power to deal with primaries, for us longer to hesitate to prescribe the rule which shall govern with reference to primaries, so far as the use of money or the amount of money is concerned. I not only think that we have the power, but I think, under the fearful conditions which obtain in the country at the present time, the highest obligation rests upon the Congress to exercise that power and to define what the Congress conceives to be the proper use of money and the amount which may be lawfully expended in primaries as well as in elections.

Perhaps it is not necessary to discuss this phase of the question at great length, but it has a relevancy to the proposition which I arose particularly to discuss. I wish, therefore, to accentuate it to some extent. Article I, section 4, of the Constitution provides that—

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The only authority which a State has to hold a primary with reference to Senators and Representatives, the only authority which it has to provide machinery by which a candidate may be nominated, either in convention or by a primary, is derived from section 4 which I have just read. If a State has authority to provide for the nomination of Senators or Representatives, if the States, in their respective jurisdictions, have that power, it is by virtue of this provision of the Constitution. In other words, if the word "elections" here is not sufficiently broad and comprehensive to cover all the steps and to embrace all the machinery necessary from the beginning to the end to hold an election, including registration, nomination, and the final vote, then the State has no authority under the law, and it has not had under this provision of the Constitution, to provide for the nomination of Senators and Representatives. It should be borne in mind that this is not one of the powers or rights which originally belonged to the States and which they delegated to the National Government.

This is a right growing out of the organization of the National Government, a power which it created for itself and the execution of which it chose to leave to the States to a certain extent. The election of a Senator is a right growing out of the organization of the National Government. The framers saw fit to provide that in the first instance the State might prescribe the manner in which such election should be held, but the same power which the State has under this authority the National Congress has if it chooses to use it. The provision of the Constitution—"but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators"—gives the National Government the unquestioned power, if it sees fit to do so, to hold elections for Senators and Representatives. The Supreme Court has decided very explicitly that when the National Government sees fit to exercise this power it may exercise it in part, in cooperation with the State governments, or it may take complete control of the election of Senators and Representatives.

If we begin, then, with the proposition that the primaries held were legal primaries, properly arranged and provided for by the States—as I have no doubt they were—we are compelled to admit that if the National Government sees fit to deal with the subject it has the power to do so; and the Supreme Court has held that when the National Government acts upon this subject or deals with it, its rule is paramount and controls any action which the State may have seen fit to take.

The Constitution has given to the Congress the power to hold elections; that has been determined. The Constitution also provides—and we are very familiar with the rule—that Congress has the power to make all laws necessary to carry into execution the powers granted to it. If we view this from another standpoint, to wit, that the power to hold elections has been granted to the National Government, then the power necessary to the holding of a proper election is granted, because Congress has the power to pass laws to carry into execution the general powers granted. If a State should see fit to refuse to hold a primary or otherwise to nominate a Senator or to nominate a Representative, there could be no doubt, it seems to me, that the National Government could and undoubtedly would arrange for the holding of the election; and if Congress should arrange for the holding of the election, it would have the power to do all which was necessary to the holding of an orderly election. It could provide the machinery from the first step to the last. It could exercise an authority as full and complete as the States now exert.

It has been said that when the Constitution was adopted there was no such thing as a primary, and that the fathers could not have contemplated that a primary would be included in this general provision. It is true that there was then no such thing as a primary, but there was such a thing as a candidate, something with which the fathers were entirely familiar; there was such a thing as providing candidates and arranging for the registration of voters and for elections. The naming and selecting of candidates in order to have somebody to elect was likely familiar to the fathers. Undoubtedly, the particular matter of providing the candidate, whether by conventions, or by primaries, or any method which the Congress might see fit to choose, could well be included within the power to hold elections. If the Congress could provide for holding elections it could provide for all the steps and all the machinery necessary, such as nomination of candidates, registration, and the final vote.

I do not care to go further into detail. At another time, perhaps, and under somewhat different circumstances, it will be proper to discuss this phase of the subject. My contention for the present is that the Congress has the power—it is the power of self-preservation—to hold elections and to hold them properly, and I feel that the Congress ought, particularly in view of present-day conditions, to exercise the power, and, so far as the use of money and the proper conduct of primaries is concerned, to pass legislation to control them.

It is further contended, and very earnestly and by able men, judges, lawyers, and Senators, that in passing upon the qualifications of a Senator we are confined to the questions of age, inhabitancy of the State, and citizenship. It is urged that as the Constitution defines three qualifications, they are the only ones which we can consider in passing upon the qualifications of a Senator. Neither will it be necessary to discuss this contention at length, but I am clear that we have the power to pass upon the qualifications of a Senator and are not confined to the questions of age, inhabitancy, and citizenship.

The men who were delegated to put the Constitution of the United States in proper form and to give it its style have been complimented many times since then for the masterly manner in which they performed their task. It has always seemed to me that, masters of English that they were, had they had in contemplation the proposition of confining the qualifications of a Senator to the three mentioned in the Constitution, instead of saying that no one shall be a Senator unless he has reached a certain age, and so forth, they would have said that everyone who has reached the age of 30 years and has been an inhabitant of his State for the requisite time, and so forth, shall be qualified to become a Senator. They did not do that; they left the matter as it is now provided in the Constitution. It seems to me that we have the power here to pass upon the qualifications of Senators beyond the range of the three particular qualifications designated in the Constitution.

I will digress long enough to read a few paragraphs from arguments of distinguished Members of this body who have preceded us and then pass on to the main question in which I am interested.

But even without this amendment [the fourteenth amendment]—

Said Charles Sumner—

I can not doubt that the original text is sufficiently clear and explicit. It is nowhere said in the Constitution that certain specified requirements, and none other, shall be qualifications of Senators. The word "qualifications," which plays such a part in this case, occurs in another connection, where it is provided that each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own Members. What these qualifications may be is to be found elsewhere.

Senator Edmunds discussed this matter at some length upon a very important occasion, and he said:

Senators will observe that these are negative statements. They are exclusive, everyone of them. It is not declaring who shall be admitted into the Senate of the United States; it is declaring who shall not be eligible to election to this body; that is all. * * * We declared in our Constitution that a certain class of persons should never under any circumstances, whatever their other qualifications might be, be Senators of the United States. No alien should be a Senator. Did it, therefore, follow that every citizen, male or female, black or white, rich or poor, sane or insane, innocent or criminal, should be a Senator? Not by any means, I take it.

Under Article I, section 5, we have the power to pass upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of Senators. If there is any limit to that power save the sound judgment of this body, I am unable to find it; I do not believe it exists. As was so well said by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] yesterday, it is liable to abuse. So is almost any power that can be found in the Constitution because somewhere, at some time, somebody must render a final judgment or make final disposition of the subject. It is indeed a vast power, and when we consider that we may exercise it in contravention of the wishes expressed by a State it becomes a delicate and ominous power. All this, in my opinion, we may do by a majority vote. We may pass upon his qualifications, we may pass upon the validity of his election, and may do so by a majority of the Senate.

I conceive that we are proceeding wholly under article 1, section 5, clause 1, and not at all under article 1, section 5, clause 2, and that under that clause our power is practically without limit.

Mr. President, the question is, when we come to exercise this power, what should be the procedure here in the Senate? I speak to-day not particularly in the interest of the two cases which are before us, but I am speaking of what I conceive to be the proper procedure in all cases where a State sends a man here with a certificate of election valid upon its face.

I feel that it ought to be the established, settled procedure of the Senate, when we come to pass upon the acts of the State and review its judgment and pass upon the qualifications of its representatives, that it ought to be understood that at some time and in the proper way that State would be heard, and heard upon an equality with those who challenge its actions, heard with its full constitutional representation in the Senate, and heard through the voice of the one whom it has chosen to represent it. It is here that I find myself in the unfortunate position of disagreeing with those with whom I have thus far traveled.

I can not get my consent to deny to the State of Illinois or to the State of Pennsylvania, or to the 800,000 men who voted for the candidate in one State, and about that number in the other, the right to be heard here upon the floor of the Senate through their chosen representatives. I concede all that is claimed—that after the hearings shall have been completed, after all rights shall have been tolerated, it is absolutely not only within our power, but it is our duty if the facts warrant, to purge the Senate of corruption; but in passing upon that question the procedure becomes almost as vital as the power which we are going to exercise after the procedure has been closed. The right to be heard upon the basis of equality before the tribunal is one of the sacred principles of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, a dominating principle in the civilization of the English-speaking race.

This matter came to me for consideration when I first came to the Senate, I think in the very first few months of my service. A Mr. Smith had been elected from Maryland. It was in March, 1908. When Mr. Smith presented his credentials an objection was made to his taking the oath, and a motion was made to refer his credentials to the committee.

The motion was ultimately defeated. This particular case was not of transcendent moment in the sense that there was any question about the validity of Mr. Smith's certificate from the standpoint of corruption in his election; but it involved the question of what should be done with a certificate when it was presented here by a sovereign State—whether the party should be permitted to be sworn in upon the face of that certificate, or whether he should stand aside until it should be determined whether or not the certificate was in all particulars valid.

Senator Culberson said:

The issue as presented in this case is not whether Mr. Smith from Maryland was lawfully elected to the Senate, but having presented to the Senate credentials, regular in form, showing no objection to his being sworn, upon the face of the certificate, the question is: Whether that shall be done.

That was the exact proposition which, thus early, presented to me for investigation; and I had much more time to investigate those things then than I have now. I investigated in view of the particular matter before the Senate and also as a matter of general and historic interest. Upon the strength of that issue, I made the brief which in a large measure I am following to-day.

Mr. Smith was finally seated, after considerable debate. Those who voted for the seating of Mr. Smith were Mr. Beveridge, Mr. Borah, Mr. La Follette, Mr. McCumber, Mr. Piles, Mr. Smoot, Mr. Teller, and Mr. Warner, together with all the Democratic Members voting. I call attention to this case to indicate what has been my view of the matter during these years, obtained in the first instance through an investigation in which I could have no possible prejudice or bias. Time and reexamination have served to confirm the view therein entertained. In my opinion, Mr. President, that has been the practice of the Senate practically since its organization, with the exception of the precedents which were established in the reconstruction period; and no one ever goes to the reconstruction period for precedents to be followed. With the exception of those days, so far as I have been able to ascertain, the procedure of the Senate has been to admit the party to the floor to take the oath and to be heard in his own defense when the certificate was valid upon its face.

Those cases which seem to be exceptions are cases in which the validity of the certificate was really involved. Where it was in no sense involved, at any time or in any way, the procedure has been practically uniform. I do not say there has been no exception, because there have been a multitude of these cases; but I have not been able to find any exception to the rule.

One of the most noted cases, and one which I think ought to be very persuasive, was the case of L. Q. C. Lamar, the distinguished Mississippian who came here in 1877 and presented himself at the bar of the Senate to take the oath. Objection was made to his having the oath administered. At the time that the objection was made there was on file in the archives of the Congress an extensive report made by a committee of Congress. The objection was based upon the proposition that no election, in the true sense of the term, had been held in the State of Mississippi. Charges of force and fraud and misconduct and those things which were characteristic of the contentions of that time with reference to those conditions were found in this report. Those who objected to Mr. Lamar's being sworn in asked that the report be read. The position taken by Mr. Blaine, Mr. Conkling, Mr. Thurman, of Ohio, and others only less distinguished, was to the effect that, regardless of what was in the report, regardless of what bearing it might have upon the ultimate right of Mr. Lamar to hold the seat, the certificate bearing the seal of the great State of Mississippi entitled Mr. Lamar to take his oath.

When you take into consideration the standing and reputation and character of the men who took part in the debate, the intense feeling which prevailed at that time in partisan matters, and the conditions which it was asserted existed in Mississippi, it seems to me that that is a precedent which is well worthy of our consideration at this time; for, notwithstanding the awful conditions which have been portrayed in regard to these elections, notwithstanding the fact that they may be steeped in corruption, and notwithstanding the fact that their seats may ultimately be denied to these men, the right to be heard, the right of their States to be heard, the right of the voters to be heard, in my judgment, is an inherent right; and the character of the man who carries the certificate has nothing to do with that inherent right. It is a right which belongs to all, the wicked as well as the good, the unjust as well as the just.

Mr. Blaine said:

> I hope the Senate will not adjourn when a motion is pending to swear in a Senator whose credentials are entirely regular, against whom there is no contest.

That is, no contest by another Senator.

> If there is anything at all affecting his election, it is something for labored investigation in the Senate; something upon which prima facie we have no possible power to pass. This is the case of a Senator who has just the same right to be sworn in now as I had yesterday. * * * We are to determine, here now, whether the Senate of the United States will say that a Senator who has no contestant, elected by a single and undisputed legislature, his credentials bearing the broad seal of the State, and signed by the undoubted governor of the State, shall be stopped on the threshhold for an investigation. It is a dangerous thing to do.

Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, the Old Roman, said:

> No matter what is contained in the report, nothing in it goes to the prima facie right of Lamar to a seat in this body. It may be a matter for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to consider after he has been sworn in if objection is made to his retaining his seat; but his credentials make a prime facie case entitling him to a seat here, and there is not one word in all that report which touches the action at all.

This matter was debated at some length, and Mr. Lamar was permitted to take the oath. It is a notable case. To me it is a controlling precedent.

On the next day, or a day or so thereafter, Hon. John T. Morgan, of Alabama, appeared at the bar of the Senate and asked permission to take the oath. Again objection was made, and again these reports were referred to, and again the Senate debated the matter. In this debate Hon. Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana, took part; and there was no man in public life at that time who was more willing to give credence to the alleged conditions in the South at that time than Mr. Morton, and he frankly so stated; but he stated that the prima facie right of Mr. Morgan could not be challenged by that condition of affairs.

I shall not pause to read these statements at length. On March 22, 1871, Mr. Goldthwaite, of Alabama, presented his credentials. I call attention to this particularly in order to get the view, again, of Senator Thurman, of Ohio:

> That where a Member of this body is elected by a legislature competent to elect him, and presents to the body the proper credentials of his election, it is right, and such has been the uniform usage of the Senate, to admit him to his seat, and if there be ground of contest to consider that afterwards. * * * I do not know of one single instance in which that rule has been departed from. I have read every contested-election case that has happened in the Senate from the organization of the Government down to this day; * * * and I find not one single decision to the contrary.

He then calls attention to certain decisions which have been supposed to be in contravention of that rule and distinguishes them by showing that the contention was whether or not the certificate was valid; but where the certificate was unquestioned, he continued, there was no exception to the rule.

In the Lorimer case the Senator elect was permitted to be sworn.

In the Newberry case the Senator elect was permitted to be sworn.

In the Stephenson case the Senator elect was permitted to take the oath. There are many precedents to the same purport, but I shall not trespass upon the time of the Senate to read them.

Mr. President, I am perfectly aware that precedents do not necessarily control the action of the Senate. We may disregard them if we think they were unwisely established; and therefore, aside from the precedents which might be cited at length, let us ask what is the fair, just, and orderly procedure in a case of this kind?

Suppose we permit Mr. SMITH to take the oath; suppose we permit him to speak in his own behalf; and suppose we permit the people of Illinois to have their full constitutional representation and to speak here upon the floor of the Senate. If we find the facts to support our conclusions, what have we lost, except, perhaps, two or three hours of time? It is within our power, when the conclusion has been reached, or when the procedure is at a close, to exercise our judgment and exclude him; and for myself, I shall feel infinitely better after I have voted, if I do vote, to unseat Mr. SMITH, if I know the people of Illinois have no reason to complain of the Senate in its procedure.

So far as this particular case is concerned, let us assume that it will make no difference in the final result. But, as has been said so often, and as was stated by the able Senator from Nebraska, this is such a stupendous power that you can easily imagine its arbitrary and unjust use under certain circumstances. If we contend that by a mere majority vote we can stop a man at the door of the Senate and say that he shall not be heard, or that his State shall not be heard, we have established a rule of procedure which may and undoubtedly will in time lead to a great wrong. There is one way in which the use of that arbitrary power, in my judgment, can be to a large extent made impossible. If a man comes here with his certificate, and the State which has sent him here is permitted to be heard upon the floor of the Senate, and permitted to state its case to the country, to use this body as a forum where they may present their cause, it will be practically impossible ever to unseat a man except on the most solid and confirmed reasons. It will be difficult to either drop into injustice or through partisan bias or passion override the rights of the voters.

It has been said that Mr. SMITH has been before the committee. He went before the committee as a witness. He went before the committee at a time when he did not hold the certificate of his State. He was there a citizen. But there is no place in the committee room or elsewhere where he as a witness is placed upon an equality with those who challenge his right to a seat, which equality he has when he comes here and takes his oath and speaks by authority of the State of Illinois. Does anybody who holds a seat in this Chamber contend that the rights and privileges and influence of a witness is to be compared with the privileges and powers of a Senator speaking as a matter of right for a sovereign State?

If his discussion of his view of the matter modifies our view, he is entitled to that benefit and his State is entitled to it. If he fails to modify our view, we have recognized and tolerated to the fullest extent the right of a State to be heard, and there will be no regrets upon our part when we shall have acted. All will have had the fullest opportunity to be heard, one of the best assurances that full justice will be done.

As I said a moment ago, I have been called upon three different times to pass upon these questions, and I shall never be able to efface from my memory the pathos of the closing scene in one of those controversies. The Senator had spoken ably in his own defense. He sat in his seat until the vote was counted and announced, and then, alone, dishonored, disgraced, disowned and banished by his colleagues, he passed out of the door of this Chamber. Strong men wept, and everyone was moved by the scene. It is a high and honorable ambition to seek a seat in this body and to see that ambition thwarted upon the threshold of its realization, whatever may be the reason, stirs the deeper feelings of the human heart. But the Senate met its task, it met the supreme test, it fulfilled the expectations of the fathers, it justified the place of dignity and power given to it in our form of government; it tolerated a hearing and respected the rights of the parties, and then unflinchingly proceeded to the final discharge of its duty. Infinitely better, my friends, infinitely better, than to deny the man whose ambitions are wrapped up in the situation, and the State whose honor is wrapped up in the controversy, the right to be heard upon the floor of this body.

The famous case of John Wilkes has been cited many times since this controversy arose. John Wilkes was one of the most disreputable characters who ever broke into English politics. He was guilty of all kinds of offenses which the law defined, and a great number which the law did not define. While a member of the House of Commons, he published an article known as "North Briton No. 45." It was a denunciation of the King and his ministerial advisers.

For that John Wilkes was arrested, a general warrant was issued, and his house was searched, and he was finally expelled from the House of Commons. He went to Paris and remained for some three or four years, and returned. He was a candidate for reelection in the city of London district, and was defeated. He submitted himself to the voters of the Middlesex district, and was elected. When he appeared for the purpose of being sworn, he was denied the right to take the oath. Mr. Bleackley, in Life of Wilkes, says: "Wilkes appeared at the bar of the House, claimed his right to take the oath. This request was denied."

The Wilkes case has been cited here to a proposition to which it has, in my judgment, no relevancy whatever. There never was any contention, as I read that record, that the House of Commons did not have the power to exclude him or to expel him. There was never any contention, so far as I am able to read the record, that the House of Commons did not have the power to pass upon his fitness and his qualifications. But what Edmund Burke and Lord Cavandish and Grenville contended was that the power which the House of Commons had was being exercised arbitrarily and unjustly, and for that reason they made a fight—a gallant fight—for a man whom they utterly distrusted.

Lord Cavendish, in discussing this matter, said:

> Because our power is unlimited, we are peculiarly bound to be cautious in the exercise of it when we presume to control the right of our constituents. No subject can be more fatally important. Though convicted of these crimes—

He had been convicted—

> Though convicted of these crimes, the electors of Middlesex have chosen him; and you say to them, "It is true you have chosen him, but he shall not sit." Let the gentlemen consider—

Then he proceeds to the discussion of the detailed affair.

Edmund Burke, in discussing this matter, said:

> They [the people] have the right of electing; you have a right of expelling; they of choosing; you of judging, and only of judging of the choice. The question amounts to this, Whether you mean to be a legal tribunal or an arbitrary and despotic assembly.

The only relevancy that the Wilkes case has to the situation confronting us, in my judgment, is with reference to whether we are going to exercise this power in a way, speaking with the utmost respect for those who differ from me, which seems to me arbitrary and unfair; whether the tremendous power which we have shall be exercised with all due respect to the great State which is here concerned, speaking now particularly of the State of Illinois. It can not be overlooked that this is not a matter which was in the dark at the time the election took place. As I understand, there is no question about the election itself; that is, the final vote. The charges of misconduct rest upon what happened with reference to the primary. The people have voted with full knowledge, and it is their judgment we would renounce without hearing their chosen Senator. It may not be uninstructive to remember that in that long fight of a dozen years the Middlesex voters won out. The outrage aroused all England. The voters reelected Wilkes five times, and the fifth time he remained—yes, remained, and secured the adoption of a resolution expunging from the records the evidence of his exclusions. In dealing with so vital a right as the right of the people to select their own Senators, let us leave no trace of the exercise of arbitrary or unfair or unjust power.

As I said in the opening, Mr. President, what I have had to say has no relevancy whatever to what I may have to say when the matter is properly before the Senate, as I view the proceedings. But I shall be compelled, notwithstanding the probable misunderstanding, to vote against the resolution of the able Senator from Nebraska, unless prior to the time we vote upon it Mr. SMITH shall be permitted to take the oath and speak in behalf of himself and his State on this floor.

What I am asking, so far as I am concerned, is an opportunity to pass upon this record after those who are vitally concerned have had an opportunity to present it from their viewpoint.

It is a right which can not be overestimated in its importance. It is not a mere question of procedure, it is a vital right, a vital privilege, a thing which we should not deny. We can ultimately exercise our power, but until the interested party shall have been heard, until the State shall have been heard, we should not assume to pass upon the merits of this controversy.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I regret to state that my colleague the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained at his home by illness.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, yesterday, during the course of his remarks, I understood the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] to assert that the Senator designate, Mr. SMITH, had not had his day in court, that he had not had an opportunity of calling witnesses before the special committee which investigated his case and made reports to the Senate, and that the passage of the pending resolution in its present form would operate as a denial of the right of a hearing to Mr. SMITH.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who submitted this resolution, as stated by his colleague, is ill and unable to be in the Senate to-day. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois whether he requests or desires or demands a further hearing on behalf of Mr. SMITH, or whether Mr. SMITH desires a further hearing by way of submitting evidence to the committee.

Mr. DENEEN. I have not consulted with Senator SMITH since I made my speech, but in the hearings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections last spring the request was made for a hearing and for ample time to present testimony. I take it for granted that that request stands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of that statement, at the request of the Senator who offered the pending resolution, I ask leave to perfect the resolution for the Senator from Nebraska by amending the last clause in the resolution as follows:

Strike out the last resolve and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Be it further resolved, That the claim of the said FRANK L. SMITH to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said FRANK L. SMITH and to take such further evidence on its own motion as shall be proper in the premises and to report to the Senate at the earliest possible date, and that until the coming in of the report of said committee and until the final action of the Senate thereon the said FRANK L. SMITH be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate."

The proponents of the resolution take the position that this case is exceptional in that an investigation has been made by a committee of the Senate under special direction of the Senate and that the report of that committee shows a state of facts which not only justifies but requires the Senate to exercise its power under the Constitution to determine the qualifications of Senators designate.

The report of the committee, as has been heretofore stated, discloses that in the primary election when Mr. SMITH was nominated he received in campaign contributions very large amounts from the owners or operators of public utilities, while at the same time he was the chairman of the body which regulated those public utilities and had the power to fix the rates which they charged the public; that in addition to that a very large amount, more than twice the amount expended in the case of former Senator Newberry, was expended in encompassing his nomination; and that these facts, if uncontradicted, would not only permit or authorize the Senate to deny him a seat in this body but would make it the duty of the Senate to pursue that course.

Now, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN], I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be modified as I have indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to modify the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I accept that statement, but I did not offer the resolution. The Senator offering it, of course, has the right, but he is not present. I am making the request at his suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DENEEN. I object.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was interrupted while listening to the reading of the proposed amendment. May I ask the Senator to read it again?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will not read it again, with the permission of the Senator. I will answer any question the Senator wishes to ask about it. The resolution refers the whole subject to the special committee, and pending its report and action of the report by the Senate, denies the Senator designate a seat in this body. All I ask is the privilege to present this modification for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and in his behalf.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the request is made in the name of the Senator from Nebraska, the right exists to modify the resolution. The question is on the resolution submitted in its modified form.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the modification be read from the desk.

Mr. BORAH. Let me read it.

Mr. CURTIS. That will be all right.

Mr. BORAH. It reads as follows:

Strike out the last resolve and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Be it further resolved, That the claim of the said FRANK L. SMITH to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said FRANK L. SMITH, and to take such further evidence on its own motion, as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate at the earliest possible day; that until the coming in of the report of said committee, and until the final action of the Senate thereon, the said FRANK L. SMITH be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate."

So far as I am individually concerned, I would have to vote against the resolution as modified. Mr. SMITH's credentials have been passed upon by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. They have been found to be in proper form and valid upon their face. This is the very question which was raised in a number of the cases to which I referred. I think Mr. SMITH is entitled to be sworn in here and now. So far as I am concerned, I do not know of any additional evidence which I would regard as relevant. My understanding is that all the evidence is in. I am more interested in the principle which I have been discussing than I am in getting some evidence which may not be very relevant.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It was also my understanding that all the evidence was in, but the statement made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] on yesterday, to which reference was made a moment ago, indicated a desire to submit more evidence.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, I submit a substitute for the modified resolution of the senior Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed substitute.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter in Senate Resolution 1 insert the following:

Whereas FRANK L. SMITH, from the State of Illinois, has presented a certificate of election in due and proper form as a Senator from said State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That without expressing any opinion as to the right or propriety of his retaining his seat in advance of any proper investigation thereof the said FRANK L. SMITH is entitled to be sworn in as a Member of this Senate upon his prima facie case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute just proposed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the merits of the case against Mr. SMITH, but to endeavor to get before the Senate two or three facts.

In the first place, the Senate appointed the special committee, consisting of three Republicans and two Democrats, or, if you want to state it differently, two Republicans, one so-called Progressive Republican, and two Democrats, to make this investigation. There has been no division of opinion among the members of the committee at any time regarding any material question of procedure. The committee tried to get at the facts and after a good deal of tribulation and labor did elicit the facts which have been reported to the Senate.

My very esteemed friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who always makes a very powerful presentation of any question, and whose record in the Senate entitles his opinion to very high respect, concedes the power of the Senate—in fact, he does not concede it; that is not a correct statement. He states that the Senate has the power, if it sees fit, to deny a seat in the Senate, but he makes the claim with great force that the Senator elect or the person presenting the credentials is entitled to a full hearing. A full hearing implies two things. The right to present evidence is the first thing, and then, if I understand the Senator from Idaho correctly, the right to be heard before his judges by argument on the floor of the Senate. Let me dispose of the first question—whether there has been a full and fair hearing in this case.

I shall not weary the Senate by reading at any length from the record. It is sufficient to say that the representatives of Mr. SMITH stated that Mr. SMITH desired to be heard, that Mr. SMITH appeared before the committee, and that the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. SMITH, you indicated that you wanted to make a statement, and the committee, in fairness, will allow you to make any statement you want to make.

Mr. SMITH. May I read it into the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I want to say to the committee that I do this in all deference, there is nothing I want to evade, and that I will be glad to answer any questions, or, if the committee sees fit to recall me, come upon notice.

He then began to read a document in his defense. He had read only a few moments—and what he read will be found on pages 1546 and 1547 of the record of the committee—when it appeared that he seriously reflected directly upon a Senator for statements made by the Senator on the floor of this body. At that point I interposed, and this is what occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. Wait just a minute. The committee will permit you to make any statement pertinent to yourself and in explanation, Mr. SMITH, of anything you have said. It will allow you to state any facts which will throw any light upon this investigation, but this committee will not permit itself to be made a forum for attacks on individuals.

Thereupon, and without taking time to go into the matter in detail, the record shows that Mr. SMITH was given the opportunity of modifying his statement only to the extent that it was not a personal attack upon individuals.

Subsequently he filed his statement. Subsequently he testified and his representatives were permitted to file any paper, statement, or argument with the committee that they desired to file. Moreover, the committee called before it every witness concerning whom it had information from seemingly reliable sources that he could give any information to the committee. I have never heard any claim that there was any witness who would testify to any facts concerning the transaction which would tend to be in defense of Mr. SMITH except those called before the committee. If the committee is still in existence and were asked to-day to hear such witnesses, it would be more than glad to hear them. So much for the question of the introduction of evidence. There were reports of other evidence inimical to Mr. SMITH regarding which the committee never was able to secure substantial testimony, and hence the witnesses were not put upon the stand. In my judgment, unless there is a desire that the matter shall be reopened for the purpose of taking testimony, and some statement is made that the testimony will be forthcoming, that meets the question. If such a statement is made the modified resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will take care of it before some committee. Whether it shall go to the special committee or some other committee will be for the Senate to determine.

To come now to the second proposition—the right to be heard upon this floor. An examination of these precedents—which was made by another, not by myself—discloses that in 18 different cases there has been a denial of the administration of the oath, and not always upon evidence already taken and laid before the body, either the House or the Senate, but upon general information or upon information gathered by committees in the investigation of some other question than the particular one under consideration. So that there are many precedents.

But there is another class of precedents to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. It is that resolutions may be passed admitting to the floor, and giving the full privileges of the floor, to a man seeking a seat, for the purpose of being heard in his own defense without the oath having been administered.

If the resolution presented by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] shall be adopted, I shall be more than glad to offer a resolution tendering to Mr. SMITH—I am now discussing that particular case because it is before us—the right to be upon the floor of the Senate and the right to be heard fully in his own behalf. The solitary difference which is left, therefore, between the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and myself is the mere form of administering the oath.

So far as I am concerned, I am willing to accord to any man a full hearing in any case; but that hearing may be accorded without the Senate first administering the oath of office; it has been done many times, and plenty of precedents exist in that respect. I will say that I will prepare that sort of an amendment to the Norris resolution if the pending amendment to the resolution shall be voted down.

There is one other thought that I wish to express. It was stated by my friend from Idaho—and, perhaps, his statement was a little broader than he intended it—that this was a question between the Senate and the people of Illinois. In one sense that is correct, but I think not in the sense that it would be generally understood. The people of the State of Illinois have a right to representation in this body, but the question that we are here to determine to-day is whether the people of Illinois are being represented by the gentleman who comes here and presents a mere certificate of the governor. If that certificate is tainted with fraud, then the people of Illinois have not sent this gentleman here. I have no personal feeling in this case against Mr. SMITH—not a particle. In fact, my distinguished friend from Idaho and myself went out to that State and we thought that we poured some water on his particular political wheel. That was before the matters of which we are now hearing occurred. I have nothing but the kindliest feeling for him. Perhaps it may be we hurt him; I do not know; but we tried not to; at least, I am sure that the Senator from Idaho did not.

The question that lies back of these propositions is this: Is the man who has been sent here the representative of the State of Illinois? Is the prima facie case created by the paper that is filed here overcome by facts known to the Senate, and known officially through one of its committees, duly created and authorized to act? If he is not here properly, then to seat him would be to consummate a wrong perpetrated upon the State of Illinois.

Then there is another view. It is true the State of Illinois is entitled to send its representative here; nobody questions that; but when such a man sits in this body he does not act alone for the State of Illinois; he becomes an integral part of the Government of the United States of America. His vote is as binding upon the other 47 States as it is upon the particular State that is alleged to have sent him here. The fate of the Nation may in certain contingencies be decided by that vote.

When a man comes here with his credentials in regular form, as was the case with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], when there is no evidence before the Senate to controvert, the oath ought to be administered. The pending case is distinguishable from that case and other cases by the fact that months ago the Senate ordered an investigation. The investigation has been held. Mr. SMITH testified; every witness that was suggested was put upon the stand. The evidence is here on file officially before the Senate, and that evidence, as it stands uncontradicted, appears to many men to have overcome the prima facie case created by the credentials.

So I rose merely to say one thing—and I have said more than that—that if it is the desire that Mr. SMITH shall be accorded the floor of the Senate to make any defense he desires, or if he desires to produce evidence before a committee, whatever committee the Senate may designate, I am one who will vote to accord him the privilege of the floor, but I will not vote, in view of the present situation of the record, to administer the oath and give him a seat in this body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] to the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], as modified.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is some confusion among Senators as to the pending question. I ask that the substitute of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] to the amended resolution. The clerk will read the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Illinois offers the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "resolution," on page 1, and insert the following words:

Whereas FRANK L. SMITH, from the State of Illinois, has presented a certificate of election in due and proper form as a Senator from said State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That without expressing any opinion as to the right or propriety of his retaining his seat in advance of any proper investigation thereof, the said FRANK L. SMITH is entitled to be sworn in as a Member of this Senate upon his prima facie case.

Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If present, I understand that the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BRATTON (when the name of Mr. JONES of New Mexico was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES of New Mexico] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOWELL (when Mr. NORRIS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. NORRIS] is detained at his home by illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. STECK (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when the name of Mr. WALSH of Montana was called). My colleague [Mr. WALSH of Montana] is absent on account of illness. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is paired on this question with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE]. As previously announced, if the Senator from Nebraska were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] is absent on official business and that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] is absent because of illness. If present, these Senators would vote "yea" on the pending question.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 50, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the last line of the modification add the following proviso:

Provided, That the said FRANK L. SMITH shall be accorded the privileges of the floor of the Senate for the purpose of being heard touching his right to receive the oath of office and to membership in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENEEN. I offer the following amendment. I move to strike out the words "the said special committee of the Senate," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

Mr. STECK (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote the same as I shall vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. WHEELER (when the name of Mr. WALSH of Montana was called). My colleague [Mr. WALSH of Montana] is absent on account of sickness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] is detained on official business. If present and not paired, he would vote "yea."

So Mr. NORRIS's resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate, and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election.

Whereas said committee in the discharge of its duties notified FRANK L. SMITH, of Illinois, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceeding, and the said FRANK L. SMITH appeared in person and was permitted to counsel with and be represented by his attorneys and agents.

Whereas the said committee has reported—

That the evidence without substantial dispute shows that there was expended directly or indirectly for and on behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH for the United States Senate the sum of $458,782; that all of the above sum except $171,500 was contributed directly to and received by the personal agent and representative of the said FRANK L. SMITH with his full knowledge and consent; and that of the total sum aforesaid there was contributed by officers of large public-service institutions doing business in the State of Illinois or by said institutions the sum of $203,000, a substantial part of which sum was contributed by men who were nonresidents of Illinois, but who were officers of Illinois public-service corporations.

That at all of the times aforesaid the said FRANK L. SMITH was chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission, and that said public-service corporations commonly and generally had business before said commission, and said commission was, among other things, empowered to regulate the rates, charges, and business of said corporations.

That by the statutes of Illinois it is made a misdemeanor for any officer or agent of such public-service corporations to contribute any money to any member of said commission, or for any member of said commission to accept such moneys upon penalty of removal from office.

That said SMITH has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity was given to him, not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence is now and for many months has been on file with the Senate, and all of the said facts appear without substantial dispute: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the acceptance and expenditure of the various sums of money aforesaid in behalf of the candidacy of the said FRANK L. SMITH is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of free government, and taints with fraud and corruption the credentials for a seat in the Senate presented by the said FRANK L. SMITH; and be it further

Resolved, That the claim of the said FRANK L. SMITH to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said FRANK L. SMITH, and to take such further evidence on its own motion as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate at the earliest possible date; and that until the coming in of the report of said committee and until the final action of the Senate thereon the said FRANK L. SMITH be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate: Provided, That the said FRANK L. SMITH shall be accorded the privileges of the floor of the Senate for the purpose of being heard touching his right to receive the oath of office and to membership in the Senate.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, yesterday the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] requested unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by Hon. Howard P. Castle, a member of the General Assembly of Illinois. That consent was granted. I ask now unanimous consent to have an answer to that letter, which has been prepared by the legislative committee of the General Assembly of Illinois, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1927.

In re: Constitutional rights of Illinois.

Hon. CHARLES S. DENEEN,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DENEEN: At the close of the discussion on United States Senate Resolution No. 1, Senator Norris received unanimous consent to introduce in the RECORD a communication in relation to the resolutions passed by the Fifty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, said resolution requesting that Hon. FRANK L. SMITH, Senator elect, be administered the oath of office.

The delegation on the constitutional rights of Illinois, authorized by the resolution of the General Assembly of Illinois, composed of State Senator Richard J. Barr, president pro tem of the Illinois State Senate, and State Senator John Daily, representing the State senate, and Speaker Robert Scholes, of the Illinois House of Representatives, and Representative Reed F. Cutler, and Representative Gus J. Johnson are and have been present in the city of Washington since Monday morning last for the purpose of presenting to the Senate or its appropriate committee a message from the people of the State of Illinois, as embodied in the resolution passed by the last general assembly. On account of illness, Lieut. Gov. Fred E. Sterling, the third member of the State senate committee, is unable to be present.

The unanimous consent received by Senator NORRIS in placing into the RECORD a letter in connection with the resolutions adopted by the general assembly put the delegation on the constitutional rights of Illinois on notice, and this committee has ascertained that Hon. Howard P. Castle, a representative in the General Assembly of Illinois, addressed a letter to a number of United States Senators, with a copy of which you no doubt were likewise favored.

This joint committee on the constitutional rights of Illinois speak only for their representative branches, to wit, the House of Representatives of Illinois, by the representatives on the delegation of the procedure in the house, and the State senators on the procedure in the senate.

Representative Castle in his letter represents that on June 8 there was introduced by the majority floor leader, Reed F. Cutler, House bill 757 and said bill was almost identical in its terms with the joint resolution subsequently passed; that said house bill "instead of being referred to a committee, as is our usual practice, was read a first time and ordered to a second reading without reference."

That statement is substantially true, but such procedure would not have been possible had there been objection to it, and no objection under the rule having been made is evidence of the almost unanimous disposition on the part of the house of representatives of the desire to safeguard the constitutional rights of Illinois.

Mr. Castle further suggests that "On the following day, when the bill was called on the second reading, Representative O'Grady moved to amend the bill by striking therefrom the enacting clause. After a short debate, a motion to table the amendment carried by a vote of 75 to 51."

That statement is substantially true, but Representative Castle neglected to say that the bill carried an appropriation; that neither Senator-elect SMITH nor any member of his counsel had been consulted with reference to the introduction of such a bill and as soon as Senator-elect SMITH was informed that such a bill was introduced he expressed himself as being opposed to any bill which carried an appropriation.

Representative Castle also neglected to say that the original bill, hastily drawn, did not, as fully and explicitly as the constitutional rights of Illinois justified, contain a recitation of those rights. Neither did he state in his letter that the vote as indicated by him was sufficient to send the bill to the third reading, and the same vote would have assured its passage had there not been the above objections raised to it. Subsequently the joint resolution presented on yesterday to the United States Senate was passed.

The rule of the Illinois House of Representative provides that when any five members of the house of representatives desire to protest the passage of a resolution by viva voce, a roll call must be made.

Representative Castle should have been, and doubtless is, thoroughly aware of this guaranteed right under the rules. The resolution was passed with only Representative Castle speaking against it.

Representative Castle further states that Representative Cutler came to his desk to ask if he (Castle) could not see his way clear to refrain from speaking against the bill on the third reading (he, Castle, having spoken against it on the second reading), but this, Mr. Castle states, he declined to do; that the bill was never called on third reading, but on June 16 it was tabled and on the same day the resolution was offered and the resolution subsequently passed. This statement is substantially true.

Representative Cutler states he did discuss with Representative Castle and endeavored to explain that the people of the State of Illinois had elected FRANK L. SMITH as Senator, and endeavored to convince Representative Castle that the constitutional rights of Illinois to equal representation in the United States Senate were so vitally important that he hoped his personal animus toward Senator-elect FRANK L. SMITH might not militate against the constitutional rights of his State. Evidently this argument had no effect upon Representative Castle, and he spoke against the resolution.

Representative Castle omits the procedure in the senate on House Joint Resolution No. 45, but in view of his letter the United States Senate is entitled to know the procedure in the adoption of this joint resolution, not only in the house but in the senate.

When this joint resolution passed in the house, with only Representative Castle protesting against it out of a membership of 153, the joint resolution was in due course presented to the senate. It was likewise adopted in the senate, where an opportunity was given for any State senator to record his opposition.

One of the minority asked to be recorded in opposition but did not speak against the resolution, said State senator being the only one expressing a desire to be recorded in opposition out of a senate membership of 51. Thus the joint resolution authorizing a delegation on the constitutional rights of Illinois was adopted by the General Assembly of Illinois.

The membership of the Illinois General Assembly is 153 in the house; 51 in the senate. Out of the total of 204, only 2 entered protests against the passage of the resolution.

Representative Castle further omitted to state that this delegation, representing the constitutional rights of Illinois, now in Washington, are here at their own expense to present these rights to the Senate or before any of the appropriate committees if and when such opportunity be given.

In view of the unanimous consent of Senator NORRIS to read the personal letter from Representative Castle into the RECORD of the United States Senate, this legally authorized delegation on the constitutional rights of Illinois respectfully request that you, in behalf of the people of the State of Illinois, as expressed by the resolutions of the general assembly, present this communication for the RECORD.

Respectfully submitted.

RICHARD J. BARR,
President pro tempore, Illinois Senate.
JOHN DAILEY,
State Senator.
ROBERT SCHOLES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
REED F. CUTLER,
Representative, House of Representatives.
GUS J. JOHNSON,
Representatice, House of Representatives.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for three-quarters of an hour, at which time the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], I understand, will be ready to proceed with the Vare case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senate will stand in recess for three-quarters of an hour.

Thereupon (at 2 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) a recess was taken until 2 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m., at which time the Senate reassembled.

THE BUDGET

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

The Budget system has now been in effect a sufficient length of time to enable us to appreciate fully its far-reaching importance. It is directly responsible for our present position of financial stability. That position has been acquired by scientific management of our business affairs. This management has resulted in improvement throughout the entire field covered by Federal operations. It seems inconceivable that such progress could have been made in so short a period after the great world conflict. Yet it has been done. It demonstrates the efficiency of our form of government. The good of all the people is our controlling consideration. And because of this, scientific management of our affairs is essential. In slightly more than six years we have had substantial reductions in taxes, and in that same period we have enhanced greatly the value of the service which we are rendering the people. We are raising money to pay our long-term commitments. We have provided for adequate national defense. Our housing problems are being cared for. All through our Government activities there have been improvement and progress. Federal activities have kept pace with a growing and progressive Nation. This has all called for orderly procedure, and we are reaping the rewards which follow that course. We can well take the experience of the past as our index to future operations. If we proceed along the orderly lines followed these last years, our continued success is assured.

TAX REDUCTION

Since 1920 there have been three reductions in taxes for the purpose of relieving the people of some of their war burdens. The act of November, 1921, lightened the tax load by a reduction of $663,000,000. The act of 1924 afforded additional relief of $519,000,000. The act of 1926 made a further reduction of $422,000,000. Taking these all together, our tax demands have been lessened by $1,604,000,000. This in itself illustrates the value of orderly procedure. The people are permanently richer because of the diminished demands made by the Federal Government. And hand in hand with these material curtailments of the amounts taken from the people the public debt has been reduced. From a peak of more than twenty-six and a half billions of dollars the debt had been reduced on June 30, 1927, by $8,084,794,716. This lowering of the debt means an annual saving in interest of approximately $320,000,000. While this tangible and extraordinary saving emphasized the importance of debt reduction as a preliminary to ultimate adequate tax reduction, we have at this time for consideration the question of further relief to those who pay Federal taxes.

In planning for a revision downward of tax rates the first question that presents itself is the amount of money that can safely be devoted to the purpose without curtailing necessary activities of the Government or threatening a deficit. The extraordinary surplus of June 30, 1927, was $635,809,000, and was made possible by receipts from nonrecurring sources of $414,000,000, only $221,000,000 coming from current and continuing sources. Of this surplus, $612,000,000 was applied to the public debt, effecting an annual interest saving of $24,000,000.

The estimated surplus for this year—which ends with June 30 next—is $454,000,000, of which $318,000,000 is from nonrecurring sources, and $136,000,000 from current and continuing sources. This is an increase of $254,000,000 over the estimate carried in the 1928 Budget, of which increase $158,000,000 is from miscellaneous receipts which include $154,000,000 in receipts from railroads. The remaining $96,000,000 of the increase is found in regular revenue returns.

The estimated surplus for 1929—the coming fiscal year—is $252,540,000, of which $75,000,000 is from nonrecurring sources. This surplus is reached by means of a fairly sanguine estimate of receipts and a carefully restricted estimate of expenditure. The expenditure estimate for 1929 of $3,557,000,000 includes nothing for flood control with the exception of the fifth-year allowance of $10,000,000 in the six-year program authorized by Congress. Other proposed major projects, not yet the subject of legislation, are not provided for in this estimate. It is reasonably certain that some of them will be enacted into law and will call for material advances from the Federal Treasury. This will doubtless have the consideration of the Congress. Careful study of all these factors points to a tax reduction of $225,000,000 as the maximum, and that amount only possible on the assumption that the estimates of expenditure for 1929 be not materially exceeded, and that additional continuing obligations be incurred only to the extent that absolute necessity from the standpoint of public need warrants. Adequate flood protection, of course, meets the requirements of absolute and urgent necessity.

Under the provisions of the Budget and Accounting Act, I recommend to Congress that taxes be reduced by not to exceed $225,000,000.

IMPORTANCE OF A BALANCED BUDGET

Each of the three reductions in tax rates since November, 1921, has been measured on the certainty of our ability to stand such reductions. This is the only safe course. It has brought forth a balanced budget. In this we have found our financial stability. We have been operating on the wise plan that reduction in rates of Federal taxes should be permanent. This is the only proper basis for tax reduction. In a business of the magnitude of that of the Federal Government there must be a margin of safety. The fact that this margin has grown to large proportions in the past fiscal years carries no assurance that that will continue. I am in favor of tax reduction. I am not in favor of any such reduction as will jeopardize our financial stability. The assurance that Federal expenditures will be kept within Federal receipts has bulwarked public confidence, it has contributed measurably to the prosperous condition of the country, it has ministered to the justifiable pride of our people in their Government and in its orderly and sane processes. To jeopardize our balanced budget, to do anything that in the most remote degree would threaten to interfere with the orderly processes of wise financing, to take steps in the interest of tax reduction that would necessitate either revolutionary curtailment of important Federal projects and activities or compel a later upward revision of tax rates, or both, is unthinkable. I am convinced the people of this country are overwhelmingly in favor of keeping the Budget balanced and are just as overwhelmingly opposed to any measure or measures that would make any other result even remotely possible.

I am counting on the continued prosperity of the Nation in recommending a tax reduction of $225,000,000. I am also counting on the determined continuance of the campaign for rigid Government economy. I believe that a tax reduction in the sum which I have mentioned is justified. We must, however, preserve the sanctity of a balanced budget. Under the law made by the Congress the President can not countenance a program of expenditure or approve estimates for appropriations that threaten to interfere with the annual balancing of the National Budget.

Estimated receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, as carried in the 1928 Budget totaled $4,026,780,688, and estimated expenditure was $3,643,701,593. The year closed, however, with actual receipts of $4,129,394,441.10 and actual expenditures of $3,493,584,519.40. We were fortunate in having a marked increase in receipts, while a material reduction in estimated expenditure, resulting largely from the continuing policy of economy, contributed to the creation of the largest surplus in history, $635,809,921.70.

In the Budget for 1928, transmitted to the Congress December 6, 1926, it was estimated that our receipts for that year would be $3,772,753,077 and our expenditures $3,572,049,214. The surplus indicated was $200,703,863. To-day our finances for 1928 present a more favorable outlook. It is now estimated that our receipts for the year now in progress will reach $4,075,598,091 and that our expenditures will be $3,621,314,285. This indicates a surplus of $454,283,806.

The estimates of appropriations contained in this Budget reach a total of $3,505,793,766, which is exclusive of the Postal Service payable from postal receipts. A comparison between the estimates in this Budget and those for the fiscal year 1928 should necessarily include the supplemental estimates for 1928. Many of these were presented to the Congress for consideration in the second deficiency bill, fiscal year 1927. That bill failed of enactment. There has necessarily been a change in these estimates. In the following table a comparison is made with the estimates of appropriations contained in this Budget and the appropriations for 1928 coupled with the estimates pertaining to the latter fiscal year.

[5] Exclusive of $45,233,508.02 for requirements of fiscal year 1927, including deficiencies and replacement of amounts advanced from appropriations for fiscal year 1928.

The Budget for 1929, herewith submitted, is more complete than any of its predecessors. It is the intent of the law creating a Budget system for the Federal Government that the annual Budget include estimates for all needs of the Government for the full 12 months for which Budget estimates are submitted. In our great and growing Government changes are kaleidoscopic and new needs and imperative new demands arise overnight calling for congressional help. The Chief Executive is committed by law to the policy of making each annual Budget a complete provision for a full year, appreciating the wisdom of such a policy. While actual deficits are rare, supplementals, because of the reasons cited, persist, and persist large in amount and many in number.

Estimates of this character which have already been submitted to this Congress for inclusion in the urgent deficiency bill total approximately $204,000,000. Of this amount, $106,000,000 is made necessary by new legislation. Of the balance of approximately $98,000,000, the sum of $43,000,000 is required for tax refunds, $7,000,000 for emergency flood relief, $8,000,000 for claims and judgments, while the remainder is needed for national defense or to meet demands of policies that have congressional approval. The nonenactment of the second deficiency bill during the session of Congress which closed March 4, 1927, necessarily adds to the total of these supplemental estimates which must now be presented to the Congress.

REFUNDING TAXES

I believe the time has come when our estimates of appropriations for refunding taxes illegally collected should be reflected in the appropriation items requested in the Budget. In prior years this item of expense, while reflected in Budget estimates of expenditure, has not been fully reflected in the annual estimates for appropriations. The operation has been conducted on a calendar-year basis by making the refundment of taxes an item for inclusion as a supplemental rather than Budget estimate. The Budget herewith contains an estimate of $135,000,000 for refundment of taxes for the full fiscal year 1929. This is in harmony with the plan to have the annual Budget estimates reflect the conditions for the fiscal year to which they relate. The balance of the current fiscal year will be covered by a supplemental estimate.

In the development of this plan the estimates of appropriations in this Budget carry approximately $80,000,000 more for permanent and indefinite appropriations than has appeared in preceding Budgets. This is all in the interest of having the Budget estimates reflect actual requirements. This is a step in the right direction. It narrows the margin between our estimate of appropriations and the estimate of expenditure. The latter estimate has always carried these items, but their reflection elsewhere in the Budget as estimates of appropriations is most desirable. Taking the refundment of taxes item and these additional permanent and indefinite funds together we have an increase of $230,000,000 over what would have been required under the plan of estimates heretofore followed in preparing the annual Budgets. This is not a real increase, as these items have always been included in the estimates of expenditure.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

The Budget herewith contains for the first time estimates of appropriations for commencing liquidation of the liability of the Government to both the civil-service and Foreign Service retirements. The Congress wisely authorized submission of estimates for this purpose. This conforms to the principle under which we have been operating to amortize our long-term commitments. For the civil-service retirement fund the estimate is $19,950,000 and for the foreign-service retirement fund $213,000. The Government board of actuaries estimates that an annual appropriation of the former amount for 71 years and of the latter amount for 60 years will meet fully the accrued and accruing liability of the Government to these two funds. Since these estimates are based on the present pay roll, any increase in the roll will be reflected in a reduction of the time in which the liability of the Government will be fully discharged. An increase of 1 per cent annually in the pay roll of those contributing to the civil-service retirement fund would reduce the period of amortization from 71 to 42 years.

We are necessarily concerned in the Federal pay roll. This concern involves both the interests of the taxpayers and those who are on the rolls. The effort has been to do equal justice to both. The classification act of 1923, with the extension of comparable rates of compensation to those in the field service, has substantially met the situation. In 1923 the average salary of Federal employees at the seat of government was $1,674. When the classification act went into effect in 1924 it increased the average salary to $1,749. For the fiscal year 1927 the average salary had increased to $1,846. For 1928 the average salary will be about $1,886 and for 1929 will amount approximately to $1,897. Adequate provision has been made for those employees who are injured in line of duty and for those who are retired because of permanent disability or age. The allowance for annual and sick leave, the reasonable hours of daily service under favorable working conditions, and the permanency of employment are other factors which favor the Government worker. Taking all things into consideration, I feel that the Government is liberal in the treatment of its employees. If this were not so, it is hardly possible that the civil-service records would show that more than a quarter of a million persons sought Federal employment in 1927, when the number of vacancies was only 38,700. All our investigations show that in places paying less than $2,500 to $3,000 the rate of pay by the Government is higher than in comparable places in private employ.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

In 1927 there was available for expenditure for defense purposes, excluding all nonmilitary items and retired pay, $576,000,000. The current year's availability will be $625,000,000, while this Budget contemplates available defense funds of approximately $645,000,000.

The estimates carry $48,000,000 for increase of the Navy. This provides for prosecution of work on all projects authorized by the Congress with the exception of 3 submarines and 12 destroyers authorized in 1916, for which no funds are desired at this time. Navy craft under construction in 1929 will comprise 2 submarines and 8 cruisers, of which 2 will be practically completed in 1929—the Pensacola and Salt Lake City. Ample funds are provided in the estimate for the modernization of the battleships Oklahoma and Nevada, in accordance with the approved modernization program. Necessary funds are provided to carry out the third increment of the five-year air program. It is expected with the funds recommended, the Navy at the end of the coming fiscal year will have 696 planes of the 1,000 final total contemplated in the program approved by the Congress. Additional funds are also recommended for the lighter-than-air ship, for which Congress has already appropriated $200,000.

Army estimates contemplate a Regular Army of 118,750 men with 12,000 officers, 30,000 trainees for the Citizens' Military Training Camp, 15,725 trainees in the Organized Reserve, 125,000 cadets in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and a National Guard strength of 188,000 men.

The total availability asked for Army housing in 1929 is $7,115,000, including contract authorization. There is carried in the supplemental estimates for 1928 the sum of $6,166,000 for Army housing, that being the amount which failed of enactment in the second deficiency bill in the last Congress. This makes a total available in the two estimates of $13,281,000, and completes the authorizations so far made by Congress for this purpose. In addition thereto the amount recommended for repair and maintenance of barracks, quarters, sewers, roads, and water systems amounts to $10,440,000, an increase of $1,672,500 over available funds this current year. Included in these estimates also is an increase of $2,000,000 over the 1928 appropriation for ammunition. Estimates herewith for the Army Air Corps provide for the second year increment in the five-year program looking toward 1,800 airplanes at the end of the five years.

AIR SERVICE

We have proceeded sufficiently far in our Air Service program to show the wisdom of the legislative policy with regard to this important and developing line of Federal activity. Under this policy the needs of the Federal Government are being met with orderly stimulation of private industry. The appropriations of the past as well as the estimates now submitted are all in furtherance of this policy. Our procurement of aircraft and accessories is from private industry. This is as it should be. We have gone further than this. Private industry is now operating by contract our entire Postal Air Mail Service. We now have 13 contract mail routes in operation and 7 others under contract with a view to their early operation. We can point with pride to the Federal operation of the Postal Air Mail Service. Such operation was necessary in the beginning. We can point with equal pride to the turning of that service over to private industry for operation under contract. That has resulted largely from the policy which this Nation has been pursuing in air navigation. That policy, probably more than any one other thing, made possible the handling of this business by private enterprise. In the realm of navigation by air, I have mentioned elsewhere the provision made in these estimates for carrying on the five-year air programs for the Army and Navy. In our civil work the Coast Guard, the Prohibition Service, and the Forest Service are also operating airplanes. The Department of Commerce is also using planes in its air navigation work. Provision for all of these is made in the estimates herewith submitted, which also carry funds for further development of our lighted airways. With regard to this latter Federal function, the end of the next fiscal year under the estimate herein submitted should see more than 10,000 miles of lighted airways.

FEDERAL AID TO STATES

I am including in this Budget an estimate of $1,108,000 for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy. I refer to this estimate for two reasons. The first is, that the authorization for this appropriation expires with the fiscal year 1929. The second is, that it marks the termination of Federal contribution to a project which is for State control and administration. The extension for two years of the provisions of the act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy was approved with the understanding that its administration during these two added years would be with a view to the discontinuance of Federal aid thereafter. Six years of experience under the able administration that has characterized the Government's policy warrants this permanent withdrawal of Federal aid, assured that the States are now or should be able to carry on this work without aid or interference from the Federal Government.

This opens up the whole subject of State aid, which despite frequent warnings continues strongly intrenched in Federal operations. While the amount of money taken annually from the Federal Treasury for subsidies to States is not inconsiderable, the dangers inherent in the policy are of far greater importance. To relieve the States of their just obligations by resort to the Federal Treasury in the final result is hurtful rather than helpful to the State, and unfair to the payers of national taxes. To tempt the States by Federal subsidies to sacrifice their vested rights is not a wholesome practice no matter how worthy the object to be attained. Federal interference in State functions can never be justified as a permanent continuing policy even if, which is doubtful, such interference is warranted by emergent conditions as a temporary expedient. As shown in the maternity and infancy act, when once the Government engages in such an enterprise it is almost impossible to terminate its connection therewith. We should not only decidedly refuse to countenance additional Federal participation in State-aid projects, but should make careful study of all our activities of that character with a view to curtailing them.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS

With a view to expediting the construction program authorized by the public buildings act of May 25, 1926, estimates of appropriations amounting to $8,131,000 will be submitted for the consideration of Congress in the first deficiency bill of this fiscal year. This amount will pertain to the projects included in the public buildings appropriation bill which failed of passage the last fiscal year and for which authority to enter into contracts has been previously authorized. The estimates submitted with this Budget provide for projects at limits of cost aggregating $53,577,000, and carry a total request for appropriation of $13,000,000. This amount, together with the appropriations already available and those requested in the urgent deficiency for this year, will provide ample funds for expenditure within the yearly limit of $25,000,000 fixed in the act.

REDUCTION IN SIZE OF PAPER CURRENCY

During the past year an exhaustive study involving the designs of the paper currency issues of the United States has been completed and definite conclusions have been reached. New designs are being prepared which will eliminate the existing confusion, and the size will be reduced about one-third.

For many years there has been a constantly growing demand for increased supplies of paper currency. Many factors have entered into the situation, among them being the growth of the country in population and wealth, and the more extended use of paper instead of coin. During the past decade the paper currency outstanding has increased from 536,600,000 pieces, in amount exceeding $4,212,000,000, to 865,300,000 pieces, in amount approximating $5,715,000,000. In order to meet the currency requirements, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing delivered 514,688,000 pieces during 1917, and 992,339,000 pieces during 1927. Constantly increasing appropriations have been required, and it was apparent should the increase continue it would be necessary to provide additional production facilities. Both of these considerations have been effectively met by the action taken.

The reduction in size will serve the public convenience, will create substantial savings in expense of manufacture, and will insure that existing manufacturing facilities will meet increased demands for many years to come.

SECOND LIBERTY LOAN

The retirement and refunding of our second Liberty loan has aided materially in lessening our interest charges. On February 28, 1927, there were outstanding $3,104,520,050 second Liberty loan bonds, practically all of which bore interest at the rate of 4¼ per cent. From February 28, 1927, to November 18, 1927, bonds to the value of $575,000,000 were retired with funds available for debt reduction. The remainder, approximately $2,500,000,000, are being refunded into securities bearing interest at the rate of 3½ per cent and under. The saving in annual interest by the debt reduction effected by retirement of these bonds amounts to over $24,000,000 and the annual saving effected by the refunding operations will amount to more than $21,000,000, making a total annual saving in interest of more than $45,000,000. The total reduction of annual interest due to refundings and payments on the national debt for the calendar year 1927 will be about $75,000,000.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Resolution No. 2, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 2) submitted on Monday by Mr. NORRIS, as follows:

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate, and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election; and

Whereas said committee, in the discharge of its duties, notified WILLIAM S. VARE, of Pennsylvania, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceedings, and the said WILLIAM S. VARE appeared in person and by attorney before said committee while it was engaged in making such investigation; and

Whereas the said committee has reported that the evidence without substantial dispute shows that at the primary election at which the said WILLIAM S. VARE is alleged to have been nominated as a candidate for the United States Senate there were numerous and various instances of fraud and corruption in behalf of the candidacy of the said WILLIAM S. VARE, and that there was spent in behalf of the said WILLIAM S. VARE in said primary election, by the said WILLIAM S. VARE and his friends, a sum of money exceeding $785,000; and

Whereas the said WILLIAM S. VARE has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity was given him not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence taken by said committee is now and for many months has been on file in the Senate, and all of the said facts appear without substantial dispute; and

Whereas on the 10th day of January, 1927, there was filed in the Senate an official communication from the then Governor of Pennsylvania, made and delivered to the Senate in pursuance of law, the following certificate:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Harrisburg, January 8, 1927.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the returns of the election of United States Senator, held on November 2, 1926, as the law of this Commonwealth directs.

I have the honor also to inform you that I have to-day signed and by registered mail delivered to Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, a certificate which is as follows:

"TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

"This is to certify that on the face of the returns filed in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth of the election held on the 2d day of November, 1926, WILLIAM S. VARE appears to have been chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Pennsylvania a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1927."

The form of words customarily used for such certificates by the governors of this Commonwealth and the form recommended by the Senate of the United States both include certification that the candidate in question has been "duly chosen by the qualified electors" of the Commonwealth.

I can not so certify, because I do not believe that Mr. VARE has been duly chosen. On the contrary, I am convinced, and have repeatedly declared, that his nomination was partly bought and partly stolen, and that frauds committed in his interest have tainted both the primary and the general election. But even if there had been no fraud in the election, a man who was not honestly nominated can not be honestly entitled to a seat.

The stealing of votes for Mr. VARE and the amount and the sources of the money spent in his behalf make it clear to me that the election returns do not in fact correctly represent the will of the sovereign voters of Pennsylvania.

Therefore I have so worded the certificate required by law that I can sign it without distorting the truth.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Very respectfully yours,

Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the expenditure of such a large sum of money to secure the nomination of the said WILLIAM S. VARE as a candidate for the United States Senate is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government, and, together with the charges of corruption and fraud made in the report of said committee and substantiated by the evidence taken by said committee, and the charges of corruption and fraud officially made by the Governor of Pennsylvania, taints with fraud and corruption the credentials of the said WILLIAM S. VARE for a seat in the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That the said WILLIAM S. VARE is not entitled to take the oath of office and is not entitled to membership in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the whereases which are involved in Senate Resolution No. 2, relating to the Senatorship from Pennsylvania, have been coupled in the public mind, I think, and, perhaps, in the minds of many Senators, with the case in regard to the Senatorship from Illinois, which has just been decided. I want, if I can, and as briefly as I can, to show the Senate that the two cases bear no resemblance one with the other.

It is true that similar legal question occur in both cases; that is, as to the matter of the immediate administration of the oath or the deferring of the oath, perhaps, what has been said in regard to the Illinois case relates equally well to the Pennsylvania case; and it is true that they come up at the same time and that they involve the question of the State's representation. But there the resemblance ceases, and there is such a marked difference in the facts that I feel it to be my duty to bring them to the attention of the Senate.

I do not expect to take the time of the Senate in the discussion again of the constitutional phases of the matter. I could not do it so well as it was done this morning by the eloquent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and there is no necessity of doing it when what he said is still fresh in our minds. But I do join with him in the expression of hope that if the Congress has the power to regulate primary elections for Senators and Representatives, it will do so without further delay.

The situation as it stands is impossible and unfair to every candidate. No one of us knows, in advance of his campaign, what the rule is which he must not transgress. They hang him first and try him afterwards, as in old Lord Jeffrey's day, and that is true of all of us who sit here. It is true of everyone who enters the lists and tries to defeat us for election.

I doubt very much whether the Congress has the power to regulate the processes of nomination for Federal offices, but if we have, let us, in justice to ourselves, our adversaries, and our successors, regulate them so that every man may know the law that binds him and will not have to trust himself to the whim or subsequent judgment of a possibly hostile majority in the House in which he claims a seat. Therefore I agree with the expression of hope voiced by the Senator from Idaho.

I do not agree with the Senator from Idaho in his statement that our power to judge of the qualifications of Senators elect means that we have power to judge of their general fitness and desirability. I doubt very much if the framers of the Constitution could be imagined to have intended that, when the historical fact is that they rejected a proposition that the States should nominate and that the House of Representatives should elect the Members of the Senate. That was proposed in the convention and was rejected with but brief discussion. Yet that is the effect of the argument so often made that the word "qualifications" extends to the fitness in every respect of a Senator elect and not merely to his constitutional qualifications—those stated in the Constitution regarding residence, age, and citizenship. However, be that as it may, I do not mean to take the time of the Senate now to discuss it.

I want to assume, in what I say, that the judgment of the Senate expressed this afternoon is in accordance with the Constitution in its true reading, and, after all, we must assume that, because there is no appeal from the decision of the Senate, and if it has the power to decide that that is what the Constitution means—and I think it has that power—then for all practical purposes the Constitution does mean that.

I want to come immediately to the facts in the Pennsylvania primary election, the general election, and the investigation that followed, but I would not be fair either to my colleague elect or to myself if I did not say at the very beginning that to the utmost of my power I advocated the nomination of Senator Pepper in the Pennsylvania primary, and worked and spoke as hard as I could to nominate Senator Pepper and to defeat Senator VARE. After the primary I abided by the decision of my party and worked with equal vigor for the election of its nominee, Senator VARE, and now I conceive it to be my duty, and a high duty, to stand here in the Senate and in his behalf and in behalf of the people of Pennsylvania to plead for fair play for him in the decision which the Senate is about to make.

Understand me, then, that I will make no legalistic argument. I am not here to whittle out fine points of constitutional law, but I make my appeal to the Members of the Senate as believers in fair play, as men who can rise above partisanship or even their personal interests when a question of fair play is presented to them. I think it is so presented in this case.

Our primary took place in May of 1926. Senator Pepper declared his candidacy long before. When time had passed so that it came toward the last day for declaring his candidacy, Mr. Pinchot, then Governor of Pennsylvania, announced himself as a candidate, and it became obvious to all observers there that with Pinchot and Pepper in the lists there would probably be a division of the dry vote in Pennsylvania. It offered a great opportunity for some one to run for the nomination on a platform of modification of the Volstead law, and that is what Mr. VARE proceeded to do. He saw the opportunity, went promptly into the arena and declared his candidacy within a few hours after Governor Pinchot had done so, and based his candidacy squarely upon the issue of modification of the Volstead law.

It was stated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in his opening remarks yesterday that the election in Pennsylvania was not based on an issue, but I think he must have forgotten that not only was Mr. VARE's candidacy based on that issue but it was broadcast over Pennsylvania in his declaration of principles to the number of millions and millions of copies sent in 14 languages throughout the Commonwealth, posted on billboards, and preached on every husting. There was an issue in Pennsylvania and the opponents of his issue were divided.

Senator Pepper had the benefit of being the incumbent in the Senate, with whatever advantage that carried, having had a share in the appointment and confirmation of thousands of Federal officeholders. Mr. Pinchot had had the appointment of thousands of State employees in Pennsylvania and he had been instrumental in securing the passage of what was known as the "administration code" in Pennsylvania, which gave the governor, and a couple of the members of his cabinet working with him, the power not only to appoint but to fix the salaries of practically all the employees of the State. I do not accuse him of any improper use of that power, but the plain and natural result was that he had at his command a very large organization capable of being used in a political way.

Mr. VARE had no Federal patronage to speak of. He had no state-wide organization whatsoever, but he happened to be the leader of the Republican organization in the city of Philadelphia, and to that extent he had a very decided political asset for the campaign.

About six months before the primary election—and this is of the highest importance in connection with some of the statements made by the Senator from Nebraska and in the preamble of his resolution—Governor Pinchot, acting under the power vested in him as governor, removed all of the members of the registration board of Philadelphia County and appointed five friends of himself. That registration board, thus appointed by the Governor of Pennsylvania, had in its employ some 30 or 40 investigators qualified to run down any suggested fraud. It had more than that. It had the power, and it exercised the power, of appointing the voting registrars, four in number in each of the 1,492 divisions into which the city of Philadelphia is divided, and it was they, the appointees of this registration board, who made up the registration voting lists in every precinct in the city of Philadelphia. It was impossible for Mr. VARE or his friends, even if they tried to do it, to pad that list by any connivance with boards of their own choosing. These election officials, under the law of Pennsylvania, had the right and did exercise the right to make up the voting check lists on which all the balloting was done throughout the city, and that was made up months before. As I said, they had a very large number of investigators ready to run down any charge of false registration. They had the same number of investigators after the primary, with the same power of investigation of any charges of fraud; and not one accusation by either Pinchot or Pepper ever was made, before or after the primary, of any fraudulent registration in the city of Philadelphia. So much for that.

When the campaign for the senatorship was well under way it became obvious that alliances would have to be made with candidates who were running for other State offices. We here in Washington, looking back at that primary election, think of nothing but the senatorship. But a far more bitter fight was under way for the nomination of the Republican candidate for governor. If the Pepper-VARE-Pinchot contest was a bitter one, I can assure you that it did not equal in bitterness the contest waged for the governorship, with all its enormous political power, with all that it meant in the welfare of the State. Our governor is elected for four years and has a very wide power in appointments of all sorts and in the determination of the policies of the State; has almost complete control of an enormous budget running into the hundreds of millions of dollars, and of spending hundreds of millions of dollars in bond money for highway improvement. He has almost as much power as had the President of the United States 25 years ago. The contest for that office was especially bitter. Similarly a lieutenant governor was to be elected, and that place was bitterly contested. Thirty-six candidates for Congress were coming up for nomination. Twenty-five candidates for State senators were coming up for nomination. Two hundred and eight representatives in the State house of representatives, the complete membership of that body, were to be nominated. Besides that were thousands and thousands of ward, county, and State committeemen, involving many places bitterly contested.

The population of Pennsylvania at that time was approximately 9,500,000. It had been 8,700,000 in 1920. The best estimates were that it was about 9,500,000 at the time of these primaries. It became obvious that conditions would become even more chaotic were there not some alliances made between candidates. There were alliances between those whose policies and natural affinities brought them together. Senator Pepper united his candidacy with that of Governor Fisher, with a candidate for lieutenant governor, and so on down the list. Senator VARE united his candidacy with a former lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania, Mr. Beidleman, a man of wide acquaintance and high popularity, and with Mr. James, a candidate for lieutenant governor, and Mr. Woodward, candidate for secretary of internal affairs, who were also to be nominated, and they made alliances throughout the State with candidates for Congress, for the State senate, and for the State house of representatives. A very definite slate or group of candidates was thus united and worked for by each of these two factions.

Governor Pinchot, on the other hand, made no such alliance with any candidate. He ran absolutely alone for the single office of United States Senator and took no active interest apparently in anybody's candidacy for governor or lieutenant governor or any of the other offices.

The expenditures which are mentioned here, and I will come to those in a moment, are the expenditures that were made for the entire ticket, this great throng of candidates for State and national offices. It would not be correct to say that the total spent by any group was spent for their candidate for governor any more than it would be correct to say that it was spent for their candidate for United States Senator. It is difficult to estimate the partial benefits derived by each candidate from the group expenditures. The total is all that has been reported to the Senate. But we do know that in the total of $785,000 mentioned in the preamble of the resolution, $105,000 was an expenditure by Beidleman in his own personal campaign, with which VARE had nothing whatever to do and did not even know about until it was brought out by the investigating committee of the Senate. So that it is obviously unfair to include such items as that in the total from which he is claimed to have received a partial benefit. I will come to that a little more in detail in a moment.

As I have said Mr. VARE's issue was the future of the Volstead Act. When he started out he found the newspapers of the State practically unanimous against him. Their editorial pages were closed to him except in denunciation. Their news pages he found were closed to the political news that he tried to get them to print. Everywhere in the State he found the press, with very few exceptions, opposed to his candidacy. They still would take advertisements that he paid for, but they would not print his news and they would not give him what he considered a fair deal.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore [Mr. MOSES]. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. I would like to ask the Senator why it was that the press, which is supposed to be an honest and enlightened press, was opposed to VARE?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Senator Pepper had been in the field earlier and many of the newspapers had given him their support. It may be that they disagreed with Mr. VARE in his views on the Volstead Act. It may be that they disagreed with him politically. I do not know. I can not analyze their motives and I will not undertake to do so. But the fact remains that the press of Pennsylvania as a whole was bitterly opposed to Mr. VARE's candidacy and he could not get one favorable word into those papers unless he paid for it.

He sent out incredible quantities of political advertising matter, the sort of printing that political managers call "literature." I doubt whether it quite comes within the definition of that word, but that is its common name. He sent out in all 8,590,000 pieces of such political matter. He sent them out in envelopes carrying 2-cent stamps. He was a Member of the other House of Congress; he had been for 14 years a Member of that body; and he could have, had he seen fit to do so, put speeches into the RECORD and sent them out at Government expense under his frank, as has been done, but he did not do that. All of these 8,590,000 pieces of literature were sent out in envelopes bearing 2-cent stamps. Of course, he paid for the printing; he paid for the stationery; he paid for the stamps.

In addition, he ran advertisements in 168 English-speaking newspapers or periodicals; he ran advertisements in 77 foreign-language newspapers. We have a great many people in Pennsylvania to whom some other language than English is easier to read, and we have a large number of foreign newspapers. To that element of the voting population he made a particular appeal. So that his advertising bills, which have been reported in detail, were very large.

He printed his platform in 14 different languages. As I said a while ago, he sent that throughout the State. He had bills posted on billboards and fences throughout Pennsylvania at nearly every turn, advertising not only himself but advertising Beidleman for governor, James for lieutenant governor, and Woodward for secretary of internal affairs. He made his appeal directly to the people, passing the newspapers, because from them he thought he could not get a fair deal.

The total amount expended by VARE, Beidleman, James, and Woodward and by committees supporting congressional candidacies, committees supporting aspirants for State senatorships and committees supporting the 208 members of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania—the total spent by this great throng was $785,000. Of that Mr. VARE himself spent $71,436. That was the expenditure of Senator VARE himself. He has accounted for every penny of it. The sum of $17,000 of it went for 2-cent stamps. The remainder of it went for printing, for addressing letters, for letter writing. He sent out hundreds of thousands of letters which he himself signed. The remainder of it was spent for the dissemination of political information by mail in such a way as he considered advantageous to his candidacy.

Mr. Beidleman himself, as I have stated, spent $105,000 of his own money and his friends' money in the Beidleman-for-governor campaign, and that fund had nothing whatsoever to do with Mr. VARE's candidacy and was not known to Mr. VARE until long afterwards; I think not until it came out before the special investigating committee.

A newspaper publisher in one of our counties outside of Philadelphia, Ralph B. Strassburger, who had been a delegate to the national convention, spent some $16,000—about which, I believe, Mr. VARE knew nothing—in the advocacy of a modification of the Volstead Act, sending out newspapers and that sort of thing. That has been added into this total as if it had been spent by VARE for VARE's candidacy, when, in fact, it was not. About $650,000 appear to have been the aggregate of all expenses all over the State by Mr. VARE and by his friends which in any way could inure to the benefit of the whole ticket or to him personally. Understand that, from the intensity of the campaign, it is a safe statement to make that more than half of that was contributed and spent with the governorship in mind. It is utterly impossible for any human being to allocate the proportion of it ascribable to any particular candidate out of these hundreds of candidates who were upon this ticket; but it is a safe statement that Mr. VARE received the benefit of less than half of it.

While Mr. VARE was doing that, what were the others doing? Mr. Pinchot, whose candidacy was coupled with no one else's, spent for his own particular private benefit in that campaign $187,000, although he had access to the newspapers in a way that Mr. VARE could never dream of getting. The sum of $187,000 was expended for his own interest, all for himself, with no partners in the race, and nobody to share the benefit of it. That sum was within $8,000 of what Newberry spent, and received the condemnation of the Senate for spending. I do not for a moment blame Mr. Pinchot for that; in view of the size of the State and of the magnitude of the problem with which he was confronted, his expenditure was not at all excessive, and I do not want that implication to be drawn from what I say. When one remembers that there are 4,000,000 of possible voters in Pennsylvania, 4,000,000 of citizen adults competent and qualified to vote, that the appeal had to be made to a voting group of 4,000,000, the sums spent by these men were very small.

Mr. VARE testified that it cost 6½ cents to print, address, stamp, and post a letter to each voter.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I merely wish to be sure that I do not misunderstand the Senator. Does he mean to say that in a population of—I think he said there were about 9,000,000 people living in Pennsylvania at this time——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The estimate is nine and a half millions.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania mean to say that there are 4,000,000 qualified voters out of that number?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There are 4,000,000 adult citizens qualified to vote. Not so many voted, however.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But that many were qualified to vote. It is rather a large percentage, being nearly one-half of the entire population.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is about 40 per cent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania—and I am merely trying to get this matter clear—know how many actually voted?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. About 1,600,000 persons voted in the primary; that is about 40 per cent of our voting population actually went to the polls and voted. I am sorry to say that that percentage has been dwindling for a hundred years. It is about the same average as elsewhere in the Eastern States.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. I will ask the Senator was not the total vote as between Pinchot, VARE, and Pepper a little over 1,450,000?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can give the Senator the figures almost instantly. Mr. VARE received 596,000 votes, Mr. Pepper received 515,000 votes, and Mr. Pinchot received 339,000 votes. The Democrat, Mr. Wilson, who was unopposed, received 153,000.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator is not counting the votes for Mr. Wilson, the Democratic candidate, in connection with the appeals put out by Mr. VARE, is he?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The same people who voted for Mr. VARE could not have voted for Mr. Wilson. They were, however, qualified voters, and even in Pennsylvania we consider voters in the other party as eligible to change their minds. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator tell us the population of Philadelphia as compared to the population of the remainder of the State?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have not the exact figures at hand, but the population of Philadelphia is nearly 2,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator know what proportion of the qualified voters in Philadelphia cast their ballots?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The proportion was about the same there as it was in the remainder of the State, although it may have been slightly larger.

Mr. FLETCHER. I saw a statement somewhere to the effect that 85 per cent of the qualified voters of Philadelphia had voted and their votes had been counted.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think the proportion will run so high as that.

Mr. President, in 1925 Congress passed an act to regulate expenditures in elections. That act defined elections in such a way as plainly to exclude primaries. Congress in that act made no attempt to regulate expenditures in primary elections. I think we will all admit that; but Mr. VARE knew about that act, and he was scrupulous in his effort to comply with the spirit of it in that primary election, although he knew that the letter of it did not apply to his actions. That act provides, in substance, that the personal contribution of any candidate for Senator may not exceed $25,000, but it also provides that money spent in sending out letters and printed political matter shall not be included in that total. Mr. VARE did not spend a cent for any other purpose. He did not give a cent to any political committee; he did not give a cent for any activity in that campaign whatsoever, except the printing and typewriting of letters, broadsides, platform announcements, and marked copies of newspapers which he mailed out under United States Government stamps.

The primary election resulted according to the figures that I have given. There were no charges of fraudulent registration or voting in the city of Philadelphia. There never has been a charge, supported by any evidence, of any improper or illegal act by Mr. VARE in that primary. Bear in mind we who have just voted on a case in which it was charged that a crime had been committed are about to vote on a case in which no one charges any crime of any sort, no violation of any law. The only error, if it be an error, that Mr. VARE committed was to send out too many letters, to appeal to too many voters, to make too public the issue on which he was running.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Has the State of Pennsylvania a statute limiting the expenditure of a candidate for the Senate?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; Mr. President, there is no such statute. There is no statute to prohibit anything that was done by the Vare forces or by Mr. VARE himself in that campaign.

Now, let me come to another point which the Senate probably has not fully understood. Back in the year 1906 the Legislature of Pennsylvania was summoned into special session by the governor to adopt more rigorous election laws to prevent fraud in elections, both primary and general elections. At that session one of the most forceful and able leaders of the Roosevelt following, former State Senator William Flinn—I think he was the leader of the Roosevelt party in Pennsylvania, and he had been active in all manner of ballot-reform movements in Pennsylvania—introduced and secured the passage of a bill which provided that in every primary and general election each candidate might employ what were known as "watchers," not more than two for each district, and that those watchers might have access to the polling places, remaining outside of the voting inclosure but having the right to be present there throughout the day, and that those watchers should receive certificates from the county commissioners of each county establishing their official status as watchers in behalf of the candidates that they represented.

The passage of that law was regarded as a great step forward in election reform in Pennsylvania, and it has come to be the recognized practice followed by all candidates in every election, no matter what party ticket they are running on or whose primaries they are running in or for what office they are trying to get nomination or election, to employe such watchers; and it is the implication, I think I ought to say in all candor, that the man who is employed is friendly to the candidate who employs him. Of course, he would not employ him if he thought he was not friendly; and being friendly, and being employed as a watcher, and expecting to receive five or ten dollars for his day's work—which is rather small pay when you consider the hours he has to be on duty—nevertheless it is customary to regard those watchers' certificates as privileges, and the pay that they carry as reward for political work as well as for watching. There is nothing new about it. It is the direct outcome of that reform law passed by the Pennsylvania Legislature 20 years before, and it has gone on in every election.

Personally, I do not like the practice. I think its disadvantages are obvious; but at least it was not invented by Mr. VARE and used solely in this campaign. It has been used in every campaign by every candidate for 20 years.

That explains, if I have expressed myself clearly, the references that have been made to the employment of this peculiar type of official known as a watcher. Understand, the candidate pays the watcher; and a part of the committee expenses of this Vare-Beidleman committee went to the payment of watchers in different parts of the States throughout the 8,000 election precincts that we have in Pennsylvania. When you remember that each candidate was entitled to appoint two watchers, that each person on the slate was entitled to appoint two watchers in each of the districts of the area for which he was running—which, of course, in the case of the governorship and the lieutenant governorship and the secretaryship of internal affairs and the senatorship covered the whole State—you can realize that that amount of money, spread over 8,000 districts, was very far from being a great outpouring of money in any one of them. It simply could not be. It averaged up much less than one watcher per candidate in each district.

Now, let me call to your attention some of the statements that have been made in the preamble to the resolution that we are considering.

At the top of page 2 occurs this statement:

Whereas the said committee——

That is, the special investigating committee headed by my friend from Missouri—has reported that the evidence without substantial dispute shows that at the primary election at which the said WILLIAM S. VARE is alleged to have been nominated as a candidate for the United States Senate, there were numerous and various instances of fraud and corruption in behalf of the candidacy of the said WILLIAM S. VARE.

If I may stop there, I have seen no instances, no testimony, no charge backed up by proof, that there was fraud or corruption in the nomination of Mr. VARE. None is given in the committee's report; at least, I have not found it, and I have read it several times very carefully; and none was given by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in his opening address yesterday.

Then the preamble goes on to recite—that there was spent in behalf of the said WILLIAM S. VARE in said primary election, by the said WILLIAM S. VARE and his friends, a sum of money exceeding $785,000

I have already explained to the Senate that that statement is clearly incorrect, and is shown to be incorrect by the report of the special committee filed by the distinguished Senator from Missouri. Just to start with, $105,000 of that total was spent by Beidleman, for Beidleman, without Mr. VARE's knowledge; and the balance of it was spent for this great throng of candidates for offices more bitterly contested than this one; and thousands of men shared in that and benefited by it, and not merely Mr. VARE.

Then follows this statement:

Whereas the said WILLIAM S. VARE has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts—

Why, Mr. VARE has controverted it in published statements; he has controverted it in spoken speeches; in every place that opportunity has been given to him to answer it he has controverted those statements that they call "the foregoing facts." He has never remained silent about the matter. He has only been clamoring for a chance to testify to it before some committee of the Senate that would listen to him and let him present his side of the case.

Then the preamble goes on:

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence taken by said committee is now and for many months has been on file in the Senate, and all of the said facts appear without substantial dispute—

But they do not. They do not appear with or without substantial dispute. They do not appear at all; and yet the resolution on which you are expected to act recites that as if there were no dispute about it.

Then the resolution goes on to recite the strange certificate that Governor Pinchot sent to the Senate after the general election. I am skipping rapidly over the general election, because there is no proof of any fraud in that. There is a contest, which has been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but no proofs have yet been taken. Mr. VARE was elected by an enormous majority—175,000 I believe. It was very big. There is no proof of corruption in that regard, except such as might have been deduced from certain wards in which Mr. VARE's opponents received no votes whatever in the city of Philadelphia. But when we came to look into the facts we found that there was an equal number or a greater number in which Mr. VARE had received no votes whatever scattered around through the balance of the State, and we do not charge that those were fraudulent; at least we do not need to for the purposes of this case; and the zeros just about counteract one another. No one has produced proof that there was any fraud or any corruption in that election.

After the election was over Governor Pinchot sent to the Senate, a few days before he went out of office, a certificate concerning the election of his successful rival; and that certificate was accompanied by a letter addressed to the President of the Senate, in which Governor Pinchot recited that he could not certify in the usual form because of his belief that Mr. VARE's election was "partly bought and partly stolen." If that is evidence of corruption, then that is the only evidence of corruption in that election that there is. No circumstances were given; no supporting evidence was given then or has ever been given since. The statement stood there wholly unsupported, and it looked like a Parthian shot at his successful adversary in the contest.

But, be that as it may, it was followed within a few days by a proper certificate from the Governor of Pennsylvania, Mr. Fisher, who was on the ticket opposed to Mr. VARE, who was the opponent of this Mr. Beidleman who was Mr. VARE's teammate. Governor Fisher, nominated in opposition to the VARE slate, as soon as he got into office gave Mr. VARE a proper certificate in the usual form; and, after some little debate, when that certificate was presented here in the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and by them was found to be regular and in due form, and by them was reported back to the Senate with that statement, that they found it all in proper form. Yet the preamble of this resolution, which pretends to give fair play, makes no mention whatsoever of the fact that that certificate was filed, was referred to the committee, was approved by it, and was accepted by the Senate, and is now on file with the Secretary.

That ends the recitals in this strange resolution.

Regarding the suggestions of fraud which were offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in his speech yesterday, let me call to your attention just one situation which will show you why Philadelphia turned out as it did.

Back in 1922, when Mr. Pinchot was a candidate for governor, he was opposed by the Philadelphia organization, and they did their very best to beat him. There were eight so-called independent wards, nonorganization wards, in Philadelphia in which Mr. Pinchot received a decided majority. He got 49,000 votes in those eight wards against his opponent's 37,000. Four years later these same independent wards, still independent, gave Mr. VARE 75,000 against Senator Pepper's 55,000. You can not explain a turnover like that, or a vote against the organization in the one election and for Mr. VARE in the next one by any theory that those voters are bought or paid for, or driven like sheep to the polls. Those people do their own thinking; and, whether they were right or wrong, they voted their thought as they meant to vote it in that election, and there is no corruption shown or instanced in any one of those.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Let me ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether that change was not due to a return to sanity on the subject of prohibition?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator's question may be natural, but I have troubles enough without getting into that subject.

Mr. BORAH. I would like to ask the Senator from Maryland whether that would be a reason for the Senate to reject Mr. VARE.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg Senators not to go into that. We are going to have all winter to talk about that subject.

Mr. BRUCE. The question whether a man is fit for office is a question of supreme importance, compared with which even such an issue as prohibition sinks into insignificance.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. As I said to the Senate, Mr. Pinchot, for his own candidacy, spent $187,000. The benefits of no part of that went to any other candidate than himself. The opposition ticket, that which was headed by Senator Pepper, Governor Fisher, their candidate for lieutenant governor, and their candidate for secretary of internal affairs, spent in all $1,804,000, approximately three times as much as all the expenditures that by any stretch of the imagination could be said to have benefited the Vare candidacy, either in whole or in part.

Is it not a striking thing, Mr. President, that if this resolution passes in the form in which it is, a vacancy will be created in the Senatorship the appointment to fill which will belong to a governor elected on a ticket that spent three times as much as did Mr. VARE? That would be the effect, in the direction of purity in government, in opposition to the spending of money, that the Senate would achieve by the passage of the pending resolution. It would take the nomination and election away from Senator-elect VARE and give it to the opposition ticket, which spent three times as much money as did he and his friends. I do not mean to imply that what they spent was improper; but that is not the question here.

Gentlemen talk about corruption in the registration. How could there be corrupt registration where Mr. VARE's adversary was the person who appointed the registration board that made the lists? How can the Senator from Nebraska accuse Mr. VARE of corruption in registration when Mr. VARE's adversary moved the whole machinery that registered every voter in Philadelphia, and when, if they were deceived, they had a large corps of investigators, both before and after the election, to run down any fraud that was suggested to them; and not one suggestion of fraud was given them either before or after. How can we talk of corruption in the registration there?

Senator Pepper, whose vote ran almost as large as did Mr. VARE'S, had every opportunity to challenge that registration, had every opportunity after the primary election was over to try to break it down and not abide its results if he could show fraud in the registration. He made no effort to do it. Governor Pinchot, with all the machinery at his hand, with every opportunity to show corruption if corruption existed, made no motion to do it, save to state in that letter to the Senate what I read a little while ago.

I want, if I can, to discuss this matter without the slightest bitterness toward any person. I do not want by my attitude to criticize any of the participants in this primary, or any of the participants in the subsequent election; but I can not help calling this to the attention of the Senate, that where Mr. VARE spent $17,000 on postage stamps to send out his printed matter and his appeal to the electorate—$17,000; that is, by him, himself—of course, his committee spent more—that money came right back here into the Government Treasury. When it came to the general election somebody sent out over the frank of the Senator from Nebraska about a quarter of a million speeches, printed by the Government Printing Office and sent out in Government envelopes, without one cent of postage. VARE paid his postage bills; the Government paid his adversary's.

I am here to appeal to the Senate for fair play—nothing more. Remember, if you please, that the committee itself which investigated this case reported that they did not have time to finish their investigation. Remember that Mr. VARE had had no chance to cross-examine the witnesses against him.

Remember that he has had no counsel there before that committee, no opportunity to object to hearsay, or to cross-examine the witnesses who have been heard, no opportunity to call witnesses in his defense and to examine them himself; although I gladly admit that my friend the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], had he been given the names of any witnesses by any responsible person, would have summoned them if he had had time.

Mr. VARE has had no opportunity to present anything on his side of the case except in one brief session, when he was called himself and cross-examined by the members of the committee, without any counsel of his own present, and without any chance to put in any direct testimony in his own behalf.

Mr. VARE has had only an inquiry, half finished on the side of the prosecution, without one syllable of defense or opportunity for defense. He has had no chance to be heard in his reply to these accusations. What he says in reply to Governor Pinchot's letter about the election being "partly bought and partly stolen" the Senate does not know, except as it has heard it from my poor lips to-day. He, himself, has been mute, necessarily.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have two certificates here, as I understand, one from the present governor certifying Mr. VARE's election and one from the governor who was governor at the time he was elected. One is in due form; the other is accompanied by a letter stating that the election was bought, obtained by fraud and corruption. What are we to do about it? Which are we to consider the right certificate?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The governorship is a continuing office like the presidency. The governor in office at the time the usual certificate was rendered had authority to make it. It has been referred to our committee and our Committee on Privileges and Elections has wholly ignored the Pinchot certificate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know the committee has ignored it, but did it have it before it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Both certificates were referred. They were both referred at the same time.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee ignored it. What is the Senate to do?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senate accepted the committee's report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the Senate to ignore absolutely a certificate from the governor of the State who was governor at the time of the election that the election was obtained by fraud or purchase? I do not know anything about whether the governor knows what he is talking about or not, but that certificate is here before me.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The regular certificate has been passed on and accepted by the Senate. I do not know what possible legal effect the certificate of Governor Pinchot would have. I do not want to argue that from a lawyer's standpoint. I do not want to split hairs. I am trying to argue the full question of fair play to this man who stands before the bar of the Senate for judgment at this moment.

We all know how that certificate came from Governor Pinchot, and we all know why it was sent.

The Senate knows that Governor Pinchot was a disappointed aspirant for that same office. The Senate knows that there never has been a syllable of testimony or evidence of any kind to support that statement in Governor Pinchot's letter. Surely we are not going to punish Mr. VARE, or, more important, punish the State of Pennsylvania, because in a letter to the President of the Senate—not in a certificate, but in a letter to the President of the Senate—Governor Pinchot makes such a statement as that; and he accompanied it by a formal certificate that Mr. VARE "appeared to have been chosen." It is not in his certificate that the trouble came, but in the letter of transmittal with which he sent it down here.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KING. If I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania, he indicated that the two certificates had been transmitted to the special committee investigating campaign expenditures.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If I said that, I misspoke myself. They were transmitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which made a report to the Senate on March 4.

Mr. KING. I was about to observe that none of the certificates was transmitted to the special committee, and whatever disposition was made, it related to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thank the Senator for his correction. It was a slip of the tongue if I said that.

One thing more; and this, I know, will appeal to the sense of fairness of every Senator here. Last summer, after much litigation over the continuance or noncontinuance of the special committee of investigation, the Federal courts in Pennsylvania held that the committee had ceased to exist, and that only the Senate could revive it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senator does not want to make a misstatement. Does the Senator construe the decision of the district judge as holding that the committee had ceased to exist? Does not the opinion rather state that there was no judicial question presented, and that the Senate itself must determine whether the committee was still in existence, or whether it had ceased to function?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to accept that suggestion, too. Anyway, the courts held that committee could not have the ballots.

The special committee went to Pennsylvania and tried to get possession of the ballots cast in a number of counties outside of Philadelphia. We have the ballots here from Philadelphia and Allegheny County; that is, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. We have here something like 2,500 ballot boxes, and all of their contents; but there remain some 5,500 ballot boxes still back in the State, the ballots in which, under the State law, were going to be destroyed before the September primary of 1927.

The special committee tried to get them, and could not. The courts for whatever reason, declined to order the surrender of the ballots.

Some of us suggested that it was of the highest importance to a fair determination of this case that those ballots should be saved, and suggested that the Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to gather the ballots in. A conference was held in Chicago—I trust I am repeating this correctly, and if I do not, the Senator from Missouri will correct me—a conference was held in Chicago, at which there were present certain members of the special committee, certain members of the Privileges and Elections Committee, and also Mr. VARE and Mr. Wilson, his contesting opponent in the election. Mr. Wilson, as I said, has filed a contest here in the Senate, which has been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

It was obvious that there was no money to pay for gathering those ballots, and finally Mr. Wilson said, "I want the ballots from four counties," and Mr. VARE said, "I want the ballots from all the other counties examined." They then and there agreed that Mr. Wilson should pay the expenses of bringing down to Washington the ballots from the four counties, and that Mr. VARE should pay the whole expenses, out of his own pocket or out of the pockets of his friends, to bring down the ballots from 61 counties. VARE has paid. He has paid over $25,000 already to assist the United States Senate to get together and prevent the destruction of these ballots throughout that great area.

How can we now pass a resolution that will say to Mr. VARE, "We were only joking when we let you spend your $25,000 to save these ballots. We are going to bar you at the door, and without listening to your side of the case, and without offering to refund to you the money that we led you to spend in expectation of a fair hearing, we are going to stop you at the door and say your election is no good."

That is not the way the Senate can treat people who appear before it in good faith in an effort to assist it to get the whole truth. That is not good faith.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KING. I apologize to the Senator for interrupting him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to be interrupted.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator quite accurate—and I ask for information because I am not clear—in his statement that the Senator-elect, Mr. VARE, obtained or, rather, procured the transmission or shipment to Washington of all the remaining ballots? My understanding is that friendly actions were brought before the three district judges of the United States in Pennsylvania for the purpose of securing an order to impound the ballots, and pursuant to the injunction, whether interlocutory or otherwise it is immaterial to inquire, an order was issued by the judges respectively to impound the ballots. It is quite likely that Mr. VARE, either he or some person in his behalf, advanced the money for the purpose of carrying into effect the order of the judges to impound those ballots.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I must have misspoken myself again, and if I did it was unconsciously. What actually happened was that the ballots from 5,500 precincts had been gathered together and concentrated under seal—not the ballot boxes. The ballots were taken out under official supervision, sealed up in United States mail sacks, and carefully sealed within them, and they are now under guard. But the process of collecting them and going through this very formal method of taking out the ballots under the supervision of both sides cost a lot of money. That is what Mr. VARE paid for. The ballots physically are not in Washington, but are in concentration points in Pennsylvania ready to be sent here if required.

Mr. KING. But in the possession of officials designated by the court?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Absolutely, as I understand it. I am not sure whether it is the clerk of the Federal court or who it is, but it is some official agreed on by both sides.

I have spoken of fair play for Senator-elect VARE. I have almost finished the appeal that I want to make, but I think I come now to the most important part. I want to appeal for fair play to the people of my State. The Senate to-day does not know one thing about the primary election that was not fully known to the people of Pennsylvania in November, 1926, when they elected Mr. VARE to the United States Senate by over 175,000 majority. We are going to pass judgment here on Mr. VARE'S qualifications and fitness to sit in the United States Senate, but when we do it we do not know anything that all the people of Pennsylvania did not know and that they did not hear discussed ad nauseum in that campaign, not only by the adversaries of Senator VARE in Pennsylvania but by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who went into Pennsylvania and campaigned throughout, telling the people of Pennsylvania before they voted everything that he told the United States Senate here.

I do not say as matter of law that their contention is conclusive. I admit for the purposes of the argument that the Senate can reverse their decision. But surely when, with full knowledge of all the facts, the people of Pennsylvania have deliberately sent Mr. VARE here by a huge majority, we can not say to the people of Pennsylvania, "You had no sense in what you did. The man you elected with such deliberation is not even fit to belong to the Senate of the United States and speak for himself while his case is being heard. The prima facie right that you give your elected Senator is not even strong enough to let him participate in the votes of the Senate while his case is being considered."

I am not talking now for Mr. VARE. I am talking for the people of the great State of Pennsylvania, and it is a great State, if only in numbers. Ten per cent of the population of the United States lives there. With the utmost deliberation and with their eyes wide open they sent their representative to the United States Senate. The Constitution can not be amended in its provisions for equal representation in the Senate. We do not get a proportionate representation in the Senate. Sixteen States in the West have a population aggregating smaller than that of this one State of Pennsylvania. Surely we are not asking too much when we say that at all times we are entitled to have our two Senators on the floor. Surely that is not an excessive request from the people of Pennsylvania. When they sent to this body one who has served with credit for 14 years in the other branch of the Congress of the United States, do we run great risk of taint when we let him stay here for the 60 days that are necessary to count these ballots? Is our purity so precarious that 60 days of the presence of this Congressman, who never hurt the House, is going to do injury to us? Can not we have Pennsylvania equally represented during that brief time?

It is not for Mr. VARE that I speak, but it is for the people of Pennsylvania. Their decision was deliberate, and they have the right to enjoy the results of that decision as much as we have the right to overrule it after consideration; but we should not overrule it before consideration. We owe the State that much in the same kind of fair play and good faith for which I have been pleading for Mr. VARE himself. It is a case between the people up there and 94 Senators down here.

If the legislature had elected Mr. VARE, I can see that the opinion of the United States Senate would be entitled to at least as great weight as the opinion of the Legislature of Pennsylvania; but the people elected him. There is no fraud in the election and none has been proven by the slightest scintilla of evidence. How can it be said that the case against those millions of people is so clear that we will make them go on for an indefinite period with only one-half of the representation which the American Constitution guarantees them?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, again I want to preface my remarks by stating that, being a member of the committee which took the evidence in this case and being a member of that committee to which the resolution just adopted sends the Smith case—and I presume the pending resolution will be similarly modified or an attempt made to so modify it——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator mean that he is going to propose a modification of the resolution we are now discussing?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I say that I suppose that a modification will be offered in view of the Senator's claim that a full hearing was not granted or was not obtained.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I understand the position of the Senator from Missouri to be that these cases ought to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Senator certainly so stated and offered a resolution to that effect last winter. May I remind the Senator of just what he said?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. On the 19th of January of the present year the Senator from Missouri offered a resolution to refer the Smith case to the Privileges and Elections Committee. The Senator from Missouri then stated:

> I want Mr. SMITH to have the fullest opportunity to appear by counsel, to try his entire case before a committee which can not be said to have in any manner prejudged the merits of the controversy. He may have evidence and may be able to make a showing to that committee which was not submitted to the select committee. I would like to see that course taken, Mr. President, because I realize the gravity of the question involved.

I supposed that was what the Senator wanted to do with both these cases.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well, if that is the question the Senator wants to propound.

I started to say that in view of the fact that the Smith case had been referred by the Senate to the select committee of which I have the honor to be chairman and in view of the fact that this case may take a similar course, though I do not know what course it will take, I do not feel like going into an extensive argument regarding the facts or particularly the inferences from the facts which I might make or others might make if they were arguing that phase of the case. What I rose to do was merely to state some of the facts in the case as they appear, which I think the Senator from Pennsylvania forgot, and I am sure he would have stated them all if he had thought of them, and also to correct an impression or two which he made by stating the rest of the story.

The Senator from Pennsylvania stated that there is no evidence here reported by the committee of fraud in the election as distinguished from the primaries. Of course that is true, and the Senator from Pennsylvania knows why and everybody in the United States who reads the newspapers knows why.

They know that when the committee asked for some additional powers and for an express declaration that it should continue its authority during the recess, and that when there was an abundance of votes in the Senate to pass the resolution if a vote could be taken, my distinguished friend, with all the ability which he has acquired in his long practice at the bar, supported by the very able and cultured Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and backed up by several other gentlemen of good lung power, filibustered the resolution to death. They did it even though the filibuster prevented the passage of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill and other important legislation. It, therefore, hardly lies in the mouth of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania to complain that there is no formal evidence before the Senate at this moment. He is a little like a gentleman who locks the door of his house and then declares that you have not entered, and hence have no right to say anything about what is inside the house. That is all history; and so it is a fact that there is no formal evidence before this body as to what took place at the election in November which was holden after Congress adjourned and when this committee's authority to act was challenged.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, however, has gone outside of any record to state certain facts connected with the election, and hence, it seems to me, has invited consideration of all of the commonly and generally known and understood facts connected with the election itself. It is, however, not accurate for the Senator to say that there has been no challenge of the election here in the Senate, because Mr. Wilson at least has filed a very direct challenge to the election itself, and the former Governor of Pennsylvania has filed a very direct challenge.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thought I had mentioned the fact that a contest had been filed by Mr. Wilson and had been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I may have missed that part of the Senator's speech. It is not, however, very material.

The Senator from Pennsylvania is in error also—at least I think he is in error—when he states, in substance, that the certificate of Governor Pinchot was in regular form but that the comment of Governor Pinchot was in a letter. Now, I have before me the document which, I take it, transmitted to the Senate the certificate of election. It appears on page 1338 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 10, 1926.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is all a part of the preamble of the pending resolution, is it not? The resolution we are discussing recites that whole thing, does it not?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; but I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that the certificate of the election was regular and that the letter was sent here in some separate form.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; I dislike to interrupt the Senator so often, but he could not have heard me correctly. I said that the certificate stated that Mr. VARE "appears to have been chosen"; it used the phrase "appears to have been chosen." I brought that out.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; and all the papers came to the Senate in one envelope; the letter transmitting the certificate came to the Senate at the same time and is signed by the governor. So I think it is mere—I would not say the Senator ever quibbled on anything, but it is almost in the nature of quibbling to say that these two documents are not one and the same thing. The form of the certificate is not the regular form and the reason is stated in the communication transmitting it. So the Senate is officially advised that charges of the gravest nature have been made.

The evidence to support the charges touching the election proper is not here because we had a filibuster in the Senate. I say the "evidence supporting it." That evidence, if taken, would be taken, we must presume, fairly, and the evidence to rebut the charges would also be here before the Senate, but for the representative——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that a special committee of this body did take such testimony with reference to the Smith case.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it true that the committee took no testimony or no material testimony with reference to the Vare case?

Mr. REED of Missouri. We took evidence with reference to the primary election, which is here, volumes of it, and to which I intend to refer briefly; but the election itself was held after the special committee had been hamstrung.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I thought; and I was misled by the statement of the Senator that there is no evidence here. The evidence of what transpired in the primary is probably as full in the case of Pennsylvania as in the case of Illinois?

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is very full. I will not state that it is as complete, because when we were about to proceed to take further testimony the interruption occurred.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the election took place in 1926 and the "hamstringing," of which the Senator speaks, did not occur until March, 1927?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator is correct. However, I should have said this: The special committee had gone through the primary and practically completed it and we then had to go to Illinois. By the time we were through with Illinois, and one or two other States, where it was claimed there were great emergencies, and were ready to take up the election itself, and asked for further authority, then it was that we met this filibuster. I thank the Senator for the correction.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that the Senator designate, Mr. VARE, was given no chance to present his side of the controversy to the committee. My information has been, and the record so shows, that Mr. VARE himself testified.

Mr. REED of Missouri. He testified twice.

Mr. CARAWAY. He testified every time he wanted to do so?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes. I am glad to have the correction.

The situation, then, was this: When we were ready to resume operations in Pennsylvania the Senator from Pennsylvania, I presume speaking then, as he speaks now, for Mr. VARE, conducted a filibuster for the purpose of stopping that investigation by the particular committee that was then undertaking it. So, if the evidence was not reported here, the charges were here, and Mr. VARE's representative upon the floor of the Senate prevented the disclosures which might have been made, and it must be presumed that as shrewd a man as he knew why he was preventing it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator need not worry about my being Mr. VARE's representative. I spoke then and speak now as the representative of the people of Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. I suppose the people of Pennsylvania met in convention somewhere and told the Senator from Pennsylvania for God's sake to stop this investigation by some means. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The people of Pennsylvania have approved its being stopped, I will say.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will discuss that in a moment with the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator from Missouri why did they object to the election being examined into? The Senator from Pennsylvania says they approved the action stopping the investigation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not know. The Senator will have to get a man from that State to answer his question.

What was the next thing that happened? The special committee had brought in a resolution asking for an enlargement of its powers. A statement was made on the floor of the Senate at that time in the debate that the members of the committee had no doubt of their authority to proceed, but that question had been raised, and was then evidently being raised, as to the authority of the committee to sit during the recess, and that the committee desired to remove all question of that kind, so that they would not be met by recalcitrant witnesses or by the refusal to turn over the documents concerning the election. The filibuster occurred. The committee then said it would proceed with its work, but it was met with a notice from the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate that he would O. K. no bills for expenditures incurred by the committee—a remarkable and unprecedented act. The paymaster of the Senate had been notified not to pay any of the bills of the committee. The Sergeant at Arms was called before the committee and furnished with subpœnas to serve upon witnesses and with papers to authorize him to obtain possession of the ballots in the counties where they had not been already gathered; but the Sergeant at Arms, under whatsoever instructions he may have had, inquired promptly where the money was coming from to pay his expenses, and when he was informed that if the money was not paid by the paymaster on the requisition of the Senate the committee would advance the money, he still said that he did not know whether he would have the right to take money in that way, and he wanted a day to consult—whom I do not know. The committee gave him three or four hours time to consider, and then wrote him a demand that he should perform his duties as requested by the Senate. We received a reply in substance and effect—I have all the papers here, and in due course I am going to lay them before the Senate on another matter—that he had not had sufficient time, and so he declined to act, and we had to proceed by the appointment of a special representative of the committee.

So it appears that we had the filibuster, and then we had the additional thing of trying to starve the committee to death—that is, to deprive it of funds with which to carry on its work. I do not suppose my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania ever heard of any of those things; but I am sure the people of Pennsylvania who instruct him to come here and take the position he does were all advised of the circumstances.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I advised with some of the gentlemen he has mentioned, and I told them that I thought their conduct was right; and I was very much encouraged to find that the courts thought so, too.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thank the Senator.

Now we come to the question of the courts.

We sent over to Pennsylvania originally for the ballots of Philadelphia and the ballots of Allegheny County. The courts granted orders for those ballots, and they were impounded and brought here, and have been ever since locked up in the Senate Office Building; and we were just organizing and getting ready to count them and look into those ballot boxes and returns when our money was cut off in this way. I thank the Senator for admitting frankly his part in the transaction.

Proceeding in the same way, we sought to secure the ballots from the other counties. We made the first application in one district. It was preliminarily heard by one of the older Federal judges; but when the case came to a hearing it was transferred to a new Federal judge. The new Federal judge had been confirmed the last day the Senate was in session. I recall that my genial friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and Senator Pepper came to me as one of the members of the Judiciary Committee and said there had not been time to get this appointment through the committee in the regular way; Senator Pepper was going out of office and they very much wanted to have the pleasure of having this man confirmed; and so I and other members of the Judiciary Committee O. K'd the appointment, and he is the gentleman who decided the case. My understanding is—I may be in error, and if I am I hope somebody will correct me—that he never said that this committee had no authority, but that he indicated that there had been a challenge of the authority of the committee and that the Senate must settle that question, and that that decision of his was made the decision of the court of appeals in a memorandum opinion. I think the court held that under the circumstances presented to him this was not a question for the courts to decide, but for the Senate itself to decide whether its committee had authority.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is not the Senator in error in saying that Judge Kirkpatrick had anything to do with this case? I am told that he had nothing to do with it; that the case was heard and decided by Judge Thompson, who has been on the bench for years.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The only thing I know about it is what I was told by the man who went up and presented the case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the man told the Senator wrong.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was there.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not recall the name of the judge to whom the Senator from Missouri refers, who was confirmed just prior to adjournment. I do know that the judge who tried the case was Judge Thompson. If he was not the one who was nominated and confirmed just before adjournment, then I should think the Senator from Pennsylvania is correct.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Judge Kirkpatrick used to be a Congressman. He was confirmed in the manner that the Senator from Missouri speaks of; but he had nothing whatever to do with this case or the decision.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If that is correct, then I was misinformed, and, like the Senator a while ago, I made a mistake in a statement; but I shall inquire about it particularly. I think he had something to do with this case—with one of these cases, anyway—but I will find out. Anyway, that is the kind of decision that was rendered, and that is the important thing. There was no decision, as I understand, that the Senate did not have power to create such a committee; that the Senate did not have power to send for books and papers; but it was held that there was a question raised as to whether the Senate must not itself decide that disputed question. That is very far from saying that the committee had no authority.

The next proposition I want to get the Senate to understand is the method by which these ballot boxes were obtained.

When the Senate sent over there for these orders to impound the ballots, so that the ballots would not be destroyed in the succeeding September, we met with very strong opposition in the courts; and, of course, if the ballots had been destroyed, the counting of the ballots would have been impossible in the contest of Wilson and VARE. It is true that the special committee had practically exhausted its means of getting these ballots. When we asked for the ballots we did not get them. Then it was said that the Committee on Privileges and Elections could get them. Then a joint meeting was held of the two committees, and Mr. VARE and Mr. Wilson were asked to come before the committees and they both came. Prior to that, in some statements Mr. VARE had made, he had declared that he wanted all of the ballots, and that arose in this way:

When this special committee was working, and working unchallenged, it had before it Mr. VARE and Mr. Wilson. The question was asked Mr. Wilson if he desired the ballots from any other counties than Philadelphia and Allegheny. He named four other counties in which he said he would like to have the ballots preserved and examined. The question was then put up to Mr. VARE whether he made any charges of fraud or wrongdoing in any other parts of the State. I think I quote Mr. VARE correctly—and if I do not, he can speak to Senator REED, who will correct me—when I say that he said in substance this:

> I do not desire to make charges of fraud anywhere; but if the ballots are to be counted in any part of the State, I then insist they shall all be counted.

Subsequently he had made a statement, we were advised, that he would pay half of the expense and Mr. Wilson should pay the other half of the expense of getting these ballots; this occurring after the money of the committee had been cut off and at a time when there had been no money appropriated for the use of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

These gentlemen were brought before the joint committee, and Mr. Wilson was asked if he could pay one-half of the expense; and it was stated that Mr. Wilson had no money with which to pay one-half of the expense—a well-known fact; for it has always been understood—and I can say it without hurting his feelings at all—that Mr. Wilson is a poor man.

Then the statement was made:

Mr. Wilson, you say that you want the ballots from four counties. That is the evidence you want saved. That is your case. You must present your own case, and you must get the money for the four counties if you want those ballots saved. We hope this money will all be paid back when the Senate meets and when our genial friends have taken their hands off the money that legitimately ought to be employed.

And Mr. Wilson's friends who were present said they could raise enough money for the four counties.

Then the statement was made to Mr. VARE:

You say, although you charge no fraud in other counties, that you nevertheless want those ballots preserved. That is your evidence. Now, Mr. VARE, will you advance the money to impound those ballots?

And Mr. VARE said that he would.

That having been done, the opposition to having these ballots impounded—not brought here, but impounded—seems to have disappeared; and they went to these courts in Pennsylvania and obtained proper orders to preserve the ballots. So, without reflecting on anybody or criticizing anybody, I make that statement of the facts so that the Senate may understand them; and I think there is no dispute about them.

There are many statements that my friend made which I think need some correction. In the first place, the statement that Mr. VARE has never had a hearing.

He has never had a hearing about the election itself; but I do not think it is correct to say that he did not have a hearing as to all of the matters with which the committee proceeded. Mr. VARE came before the committee on two occasions and was welcome there at all times. On some of those occasions he was represented by his counsel, and I think on every occasion he had his lawyer with him; and he had his friends and consulted with them. There certainly can not be any doubt about Mr. VARE having had attorneys there. It is true that they did not cross-examine. To state it fairly, not having asked for the right to cross-examine, the committee conducted the investigation as best it could. If they had asked for the right to cross-examine, it would have been accorded. If they want the right to cross-examine now, I am perfectly in favor of giving it to them.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator speaks of Mr. VARE having a lawyer there. Whom does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I shall have to ask my colleague to remember names.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator mean Mr. Mackey?

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I mean that there were attorneys who sat over there that Mr. VARE whispered to and talked with—men whom I understood to be his counsel.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Mr. Burke appeared as counsel. The Senator from Missouri understood that he represented Mr. VARE. I did not. I understood that he represented Mr. Pepper. I took Mr. Mackey to be the attorney for Mr. VARE.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. Mackey was a witness. Mr. Burke represented somebody else entirely.

Mr. KING. Mr. Francis Burke was there; but, as I understood, he represented Mr. Pepper.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I simply want the Senate to understand how this committee tried to be fair to these gentlemen and still wants to be fair to them. I should be the last person to exclude any proper evidence that could be offered in explanation of anything that has been heretofore testified to, or the last to deny Mr. VARE his counsel or the right to reexamine any witness who has already been examined. This appears in the record:

Mr. MACKEY. Mr. Chairman, may I make a statement as representing the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE in that particular?

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. MACKEY. Harry A. Mackey. I represent the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE here in the capacity of the campaign manager of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee, as well as being authorized by Mr. VARE to make this notation upon the record.

We are here with all our witnesses, all our books, all our receipts and evidences of all our expenditures. We are here to give this committee all the information it desires, and we do not place upon the record any question as to the limitations to the qualifications of this committee.

Mr. Mackey proceeded, and Mr. VARE twice testified and at length.

I think no man will dare say that Mr. VARE asked the privilege of making any statement in any answer, or asked to make a statement otherwise, and was denied. So that whether this examination be complete or not complete, up to this date Mr. VARE has been denied no right that he has requested, and he was there to testify; and Mr. Mackey was there claiming to be his representative, and made this statement I have read, in the presence of Mr. VARE. I think that disposes of that phase of the matter.

Mr. President, there are a good many things I might say, but I do not want to say them. I do not want to prejudge this case. I do not want to take as true the statements that I have heard about that election until they are sworn to by somebody and until that evidence appears to be credible and sound. But if one side of the case is to be stated aliunde the record, perhaps it might be well just to say that there is another side stated upon the authority of the press and upon the authority of many good men, and solemnly charged in the contest of Mr. Wilson.

The statement has been made that the people of Pennsylvania returned Mr. VARE. That, I say again, is the question: Did the people of Pennsylvania return Mr. VARE? If they did, they are entitled to have him sit here, unless he is disqualified for reasons that the Senate may find are absolutely controlling. But the question is, Did they select him? It has been said that he was elected by a tremendous majority. The fact is that Pennsylvania is so thoroughly Republican that long ago when a Democrat emigrated into the State of Pennsylvania he adopted the slogan, "Who enters here leaves hope behind."

William B. Wilson made this campaign, according to the testimony, without any money. I say it with respect, he is not a man who can stir great multitudes by his eloquence. He can make a plain, common-sense speech. He had nothing to back him but his character as an honest man; and that is universally recognized. I understand he carried every county in the State of Pennsylvania except 12. He came to the Allegheny County line in that Republican State with something like 98,000 majority, as I recall the figures; and they are subject to correction.

Allegheny County is where Pittsburgh is located. That is the city where I believe they have just indicted 132 gentlemen in one day for election frauds, so the newspapers have said. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct, Mr. President. We punish them in our State when they do anything wrong.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The mills of the gods grind very slowly, I am afraid, in the State of Pennsylvania. Through the action of Pittsburgh, or of Allegheny County, Mr. Wilson's majority was cut down to approximately 50,000; but he went to the Philadelphia line with approximately 50,000, and the majority of which my friend speaks was all created in Mr. VARE's town. I am not charging that I know it is dishonest—I am simply speaking now about the necessity of finding out—but it is charged by the press of that city, it is charged by many citizens of that city, that the election reeked with fraud. It is charged that in precinct after precinct, where there were hundreds of votes returned, there was not a single vote returned for Mr. Wilson.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Just the same as up-State the contrary was true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thought the Senator would say that. I knew he would. It would be the defense if I perpetrated a fraud, and the other man perpetrated a fraud, and I offset my fraud against his fraud; but if both were guilty of frauds, then neither can enter here.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope the Senator can reconcile the two statements the Senator from Pennsylvania made. He said in his statement a moment ago that there never was even an intimation that there was anything crooked in the election, and then he said they indicted people in Pittsburgh because they had done wrong with reference to the election.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In a subsequent election, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was the November election?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the election they were talking about.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; plenty of men have been indicted in both towns.

I speak with some earnestness, but I hope without vehemence and without feeling. I simply want it plainly understood that it will not do to stand here and make an ex parte statement that there are no charges of fraud, when the air is filled with them. I am not saying that those charges are true. I am saying they are made, and having been made, the challenge is here. But outside of those charges there is evidence here warranting the Senate in not administering this oath, and upon the evidence as it stands, that would be my vote.

If Mr. VARE wants a further investigation, wants to be represented by counsel, and wants the privilege of this floor to defend himself, just as we have granted it to SMITH, I am willing to grant it to him. If this matter goes to the committee over which I have the honor to preside—and the Senate may send it wheresoever it pleases, as, of course, it will, for it is the judge—Mr. VARE will be treated with every courtesy; every witness he brings there in proper form will be heard, and every argument his counsel see fit to present will be listened to, and there will be as faithful a report made to the Senate as we know how to prepare.

I could go into many other things, but I shall not. I wanted the situation clarified to whatever extent I have been able to perform that task.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I had intended to say a few words in the Smith case; the vote, however came somewhat unexpectedly, and I did not have an opportunity to do so.

What I intended to say, however, applies equally as well to the Vare case now before the Senate, and will apply to subsequent action in the Smith case in all probability.

Article V of the Constitution provides that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate of the United States.

I do not pretend to be a constitutional lawyer, and I have no intention of making any constitutional argument. It does seem to me, however, that by the course which the Senate has assumed in the Smith case, and which it will in all probability assume in the Vare case, the great States of Illinois and Pennsylvania will be deprived during the next six years of one of their respective two seats in the United States Senate.

The credentials of Mr. SMITH and Mr. VARE have been declared by the Committee on Credentials to be in proper form. These credentials have been presented to the Senate, and the Senate refuses to allow the two Senators to be seated.

What is the result of this action?

It can not be said that when the Senate refuses to allow a Senator, with proper credentials, to take his seat in the Senate that a vacancy is thereby created; or that the credentials are nullified. Should the personnel or the opinions of the Senate change at any time during the period for which the credentials run there is nothing to prevent the holder of the credentials from again applying for admission to the Senate.

Clearly, these men if they see fit to do so can hold their credentials and can at any time during the period for which they are elected ask the Senate that they be admitted to its membership, and clearly the Senate can so admit them if it sees fit to do so. Certainly neither State would call an election to fill a vacancy which does not exist.

Should they be allowed to take their seats in the Senate and then be turned out for one reason or another, their case is disposed of for all time.

I believe—and many of my colleagues believe—that these men, in view of the fact that their credentials are in proper order, have the right to be admitted to the Senate, and I am in full sympathy with the most strenuous investigation of the charges made against them after they have taken their seats. Should they then be found ineligible for membership, I should most certainly not be in favor of retaining them in the Senate.

But, believing as I do that they have the prima facie right to be seated in the Senate on the presentation of their properly attested credentials, I am left, and others who believe as I do are left, with no opportunity to vote on the merits of the charges made against them.

These men, if guilty of conduct that makes them ineligible for membership in the Senate, should be punished. The only way that I can see to punish them adequately is not to refuse their admission to the Senate, thereby depriving their States of representation, and allowing them an opportunity at any time during the next six years to beat at our doors for admission, but to admit them, investigate them fairly and thoroughly, and if the proven circumstances warrant it remove them finally from the United States Senate.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, December 8, 1927, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, December 7, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Spirit Divine—the eternal source of all things good and pure, the way, the truth, the life—dissolve our hearts in gratitude and mold our wills with Thine. Thou all-embracing love, Thou all-preserving power, bless and guide us this day by Thy holy presence. Amid the burden and the care, amid the labor and the calm, it shall hold us and make easy the yoke of toil. Bless us in that rigid service that makes us master of pure desire and gives us a thirst for that law that makes us dead to force and fear. Blessed Lord, may we see the crown of that which was once our cross; the good of that which was once our thorn; the victory of that which was once our trial. Throughout our fair land—wherever the lamp of truth is shining, wherever the rugged virtue of justice is lifting a warning finger, wherever charity and tolerance are wearing their heavenly liveries—we beseech Thy richest blessings upon them. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. HILL of Alabama appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS

Mr. FRENCH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw papers used in support of private pension claims submitted with H. R. 1269 of Sixty-eighth Congress.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT IN TENNESSEE

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1927, the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of the State of Tennessee issued an order upon the subject of water-power development in that State. I think the subject matter of this order will be very pertinent to discussions that are likely to come later on the floor of the House, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the official order issued by the railroad and public utilities commission of my State at that time.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what did the gentleman say was the subject matter?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Water-power development in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. SWING. At any particular place?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; it mentions no place. They are general rules and regulations under which permits will be granted, and so forth.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Nothing about Muscle Shoals?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Nothing about Muscle Shoals. Muscle Shoals is in Alabama, I will say to the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE,
Nashville, Tenn., November 1, 1927.

WATER POWER DOCKET NO. 1

On October 10, 1927, an order was made by this commission, acting upon its own initiative, copy of which has been furnished to certain applicants before the Federal Power Commission by the secretary of this commission. That order states briefly the attitude and purpose of this commission with respect to the development of the vast water-power resources of the State of Tennessee. However, it may not be amiss at this time to restate the views entertained by this commission with respect to its powers and duties and to indicate to applicants and prospective applicants for certificates of necessity and convenience the general principles which will govern this commission in its action in dealing with this subject. The commission is deeply impressed with the tremendous importance and far-reaching effect of the subject in hand, not only to the present generation, but to the State and to all its people for all time.

This commission will therefore be guided in all things by these fundamental principles: That the navigable waters and the title to all lands thereunder are held in trust by the State for the benefit of all the people as a whole for all time, and that the State has the power, as such trustee for the public, so to regulate the public uses of navigable waters as to best accomplish and promote the public interest, and that the rights of riparian owners to use the waters of navigable streams are in strict subordination to the rights of the public. The rights, title, and power of the State with respect thereto are limited only by the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution and legislation of the Congress in accord therewith.

While the waters of nonnavigable streams and the beds thereunder may not be said to belong to the State in the same sense as navigable waters and beds, nevertheless the State has definite rights therein and under its police powers, certain definite and well-defined powers with respect to the construction and maintenance of dams and the impounding of large bodies of water which might break away and devastate large areas and thus destroy both life and property, and might otherwise affect the health and safety of the public. The State also has the undoubted right, as sovereign, to regulate and control the public utilities of the State. Furthermore, the applicant for a certificate of necessity and convenience under and by virtue of which it proposes to acquire property and construct and operate a public utility in the State, may avail itself of the benefit of the State's power of eminent domain to condemn private property wherever same may be needed to effectuate its ends.

This commisison acts by virtue of authority conferred upon it by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee and in so doing is exercising the sovereign power of the State as respects both navigable and nonnavigable waters.

It is the firm resolve and deliberate purpose of this commission to assert and fully protect all the sovereign rights of the State of Tennessee to the end that the State and its citizens may be protected to the uttermost, not only with respect to the rate to be charged for service to the public, but also that the State as such may be fully compensated for the privilege of using the State's property and resources and for the costs and charges incident to the supervision of the same. It should also be borne in mind that the character of this trust held by the State is such that it must be dealt with in such manner that future generations may enjoy the same rights and privileges as do we of to-day. This trust is a continuing one. The people of the State 50 years hence are entitled to enjoy the same benefits flowing from this trust that we of to-day may enjoy, and this right this commission will maintain by writing into any certificate of convenience and necessity which it may issue the proper safeguards and restrictions necessary to preserve this trust inviolate.

This commission has definitely determined that to the full extent of its powers it will not permit these valuable and inestimable rights of the State and its people to be frittered away, neither will it suffer speculators whose purpose is exploitation of the water-power resources of this State to get control of these valuable rights; but, on the other hand, the commission will welcome bona fide investors and developers of our natural resources who may satisfy the commission of their financial ability to carry the proposed improvement to a successful conclusion within a reasonable time. The commission is also mindful of the fact that the State must first work to the interest and welfare of its citizens, and in the operation of public utilities it will require applicants and operators to serve the needs of the people of Tennessee before serving the citizens of other States.

It should be stated that this commission in the issuance of certificates of necessity and convenience will in no case require less than that expressed in the Federal water power act of June 10, 1920, with respect to valuation of property for rate-making purposes. To illustrate, it is provided in section 20 of said act, among other things, "In any valuation of the property of any licensee hereunder for purposes of rate making, no value shall be claimed by the licensee or allowed by the commission for any project or projects under license in excess of the value or values prescribed in section 14 hereof, for the purposes of purchase by the United States, but there shall be included the cost to such licensee of the construction of the lock or locks or other aids of navigation and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, and no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights granted by the commission or by this act."

Or, in other words, when any project has been completed under the certificate of necessity and convenience issued by this commission, the rate base for the said project shall be fixed by the commission and the actual money properly invested in the property shall be the basis upon which the rate base shall be computed. No consideration will be given to any water-power value over and above the actual investment in the project.

The commission will also reserve to the State all the rights and privileges reserved or attempted to be reserved to the Federal Government in the said act of June 10, 1920, including the right of recapture, to the State or any municipality thereof, at the expiration of 50 years.

The commission hereby declares that it will grant no certificate of convenience and necessity to any applicant except upon the following terms and conditions:

(a) That the applicant shall declare his willingness to submit himself to the jurisdiction of this commission and to the laws of the State of Tennessee.

(b) That the applicant satisfy the commission, at a public hearing or hearings to be held by the commission, that his object in securing the certificate is to make a bona fide development of the water power in question, and of his financial ability and purpose to carry the same to a successful conclusion within a reasonable time.

(c) That in fixing the value of the property for rate-making purposes when operated as a public utility, the applicant shall not claim, and the commission shall not include within the rate base, any value for the rights granted by the commission or by the State of Tennessee or the United States; nor shall it include as an element of value in the rate base the water-power value as separate and distinct from the value of the lands and structures thereon; that is to say, that the values allowed for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands shall not be in excess of the actual reasonable costs thereof at the time of acquisition by the applicant.

(d) That the applicant will at all reasonable stated times submit its books and records to an examination by the auditors or representatives of the commission or the State at some convenient point within the State of Tennessee; and if the project be operated as a public utility that its books of accounting and records shall be kept within the State of Tennessee.

(e) That the certificate of convenience and necessity shall not be assigned, transferred, or otherwise alienated, by operation of law or otherwise, whether the sale be made by any trustee or court or by the holder of such certificate without the written consent and approval of this commission duly entered upon its minutes.

(f) That the applicant agree to pay to the State of Tennessee not less than 1 mill for every kilowatt hour of electricity generated by the hydroelectric development for which he secures a certificate of public convenience and necessity. This payment shall be in addition to any property or privilege taxes which may be lawfully imposed by the State, any municipality, or taxing district.

(g) That the applicant agree not to enter into any contract or combination with any other producer of or dealer in electricity, or become any part of any combination, unlawful trust, or monopoly in violation of the laws of the United States or the State of Tennessee, formed for the purpose of limiting the production of hydroelectricity, or any restraint of the sale price or distribution of the same, a violation of which shall work a forfeiture of his rights under this certificate, at the option of the commission.

(h) That the applicant agree that the right of recapture at the expiration of 50 years shall be preserved to the State and its municipalities upon the terms to be set out in the certificate of convenience and necessity.

(i) That before the applicant shall begin the construction of any development on any navigable stream within the State of Tennessee he shall comply with all the laws of the United States with respect thereto.

It should also be stated that the commission is very anxious to have the most speedy development possible made of the State's water-power resources consistent with adequate protection of the rights of the State and its people. Wherever there is a reasonable prospect of a demand for the proposed development the commission will lend a ready ear to bona fide applicants to make such development. But where it appears to the commission that the applicant is a speculator merely, that his purpose is to secure a certificate of convenience and necessity with a view of exploiting the resources of the State or preventing prompt and bona fide development, his application will be summarily denied.

All applicants will receive a full, fair, and impartial hearing and investigation and full opportunity will be given to every applicant to present such facts as may be necessary in order to enable the commission to determine which of the applicants for any water-power right may be most desirable, from the standpoint of the interest and welfare of the State and its people. Priority in point of date of filing an application shall not constitute priority in right in any case, but every application will be considered upon its merits. Printed forms of application for certificates of convenience and necessity will be furnished all persons desiring to make application for such certificates, and no application will be received or considered unless the same complies with all the conditions and provisions contained in said printed form. Within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the commission, after filing of any application as hereinbefore stated, the commission will give 30 days' notice of the time and place of hearing by publication in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation in the grand division of the State where the proposed development is located, at which hearing all applicants for such power sites and privileges and all other persons interested therein may be present and offer such evidence as may be desired.

The commission is indeed happy to know that the Federal Power Commission will cooperate with this commission in its efforts to serve the people of the State and secure a speedy development of its natural resources by having a representative present at the hearings before this commission and in furnishing such data and information as may have been gathered by representatives of the Federal Power Commission and advising with this commission as to the proper course to be pursued in relation to said development. The commission desires to express its appreciation of the friendly offices of the Federal Power Commission as informally expressed by Hon. O. C. Merrill, its executive secretary, at a recent meeting with this commission. The friendly cooperation of the two commissions, Federal and State, is much to be desired, and this commission will to the utmost of its endeavors act in harmony with the Federal Power Commission in working out a satisfactory program for the development of the resources of the State.

Printed forms of application for certificates will be furnished by the secretary of the commission upon written request therefor. Persons desiring further information with respect to the matters mentioned herein may secure same by communicating with the secretary or with the attorney for this commission.

IMPERIALISM—THE NEW FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order at this time, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of foreign relations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been urged by a great many people in Wisconsin to oppose any measure likely to involve the United States in war at this time. The policy of this administration in carrying on war in Nicaragua and China without the sanction of Congress has aroused the public. People are protesting; they do not want war; they want peace. They believe that domestic problems in America are of sufficient importance to require the undivided attention of this administration without carrying on war abroad.

The foreign policy of the United States in recent years has been characterized by imperialism toward weak nations. The demand of American financiers for the "protection" of their investments in foreign fields by the armed forces of the United States has brought on this extraordinary attitude of the State Department toward small nations.

At the outset I want it understood that I am unalterably opposed to the policy of this administration in its relations with Nicaragua, China, and Mexico. I abhor the wholesale murder of Nicaraguan citizens by American marines, and I pity the Chinese who are struggling for economic and political freedom with American guns opposing them. But I look with greater apprehension upon the policy of this country which has made these killings possible. Such results are inevitable wherever imperialism is practiced by one country against another.

The United States has taken upon herself, under this new policy, the responsibility for supervising the establishment and operation of the governments of its weaker neighbors, not only in the Western Hemisphere, but elsewhere in the world as well. The most notable example of this is the sordid story of the American relations with the tiny country of Nicaragua, a nation scarcely as large as the State of Pennsylvania, with only 650,000 inhabitants.

This story has its beginning back in 1909 when American marines were first sent to Nicaragua shortly after American capital began to exploit that country. From that year to the present, conditions have been growing worse until a status of war has actually existed for the past year between the United States and the people of Nicaragua.

The administration of President Coolidge has waged war in Nicaragua! It has sent military forces into that country to keep in power a government that never had the support of the Nicaraguan people, and keep out of power the duly elected public officials of that country. Its representatives have fomented revolutions; it has exercised military control over Nicaraguan territory and Nicaraguan citizens; it has supervised her elections in the shadow of the bayonets of American marines and American bombing planes; it has engaged in battle with Nicaraguan soldiers and killed upwards of 600 of her citizens; and it has disarmed the citizens of a sovereign country by force. If these acts do not constitute war, then I know of nothing that does. If these acts are not every one a violation of international law, then there is no such law. If these acts do not constitute an invasion of the sovereign rights of an independent nation, then there is on such thing as national sovereignty. Underneath it all is the question of American investments and American loans plus American demands for canal rights.

In the past American marines were maintained in Nicaragua for the acknowledged purpose of protecting the investments of American capitalists and maintaining in power a government selected and set up by these interests. The records show that representatives of the State Department actively engaged in fomenting revolutions and supported one faction as against another. American capitalists selected one Diaz to be President of Nicaragua. The people refused to elect him; they elected another, and at every opportunity have expressed themselves overwhelmingly against Diaz. The latest expression occurred last month when Nicaraguans under the very bayonets of American marines stationed there to "supervise the elections" and keep Diaz in power, voted two to one against him, and still he is President—with the aid of the United States marines.

This puppet of American capitalists negotiated a loan of $10,000,000 from Morgan & Co. He mortgaged the railroad of Nicaragua and practically every other natural resource, including the independence of the country, to secure that loan. Two-thirds of the people of Nicaragua opposed the loan, but it went through, with the aid of American marines.

We next find the Administration attempting to justify the intervention of American marines in Nicaragua on the ground that the right to build a canal across that country secured under a treaty negotiated some years ago (with the aid of American marines) must be "protected."

Strangely enough, there is no evidence that anybody is seriously threatening the rights of the United States to build such a canal. It appears now that a canal of that sort could be built whenever the United States is prepared to do so. It appears extremely unlikely that the Nicaraguan natives will run off with the site for such a canal; so such an excuse for intervention seems to have been the last straw and that has broken.

Of course, the fact that these alleged canal rights were obtained under a treaty opposed by 80 per cent of the Nicaraguan people, negotiated between the United States and the government it set up and kept in power in Nicaragua meant nothing. Talk about "self-determination of small nations!"

Press reports from beleagured Nicaragua filtering through the censorship established by American military forces indicate that 540 Nicaraguans have been killed by our marines in the past year. The number of marines killed does not exceed six. That is a remarkable record. I recall no instance in history where the science of killing human beings has been developed to such a high degree of efficiency. In these days it does not pay to be a Nicaraguan, especially in Nicaragua.

Nor is this all. The War Department of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of War, has sold arms and ammunition to Diaz and accepted in return therefore not cash but promises to pay. These arms and this ammunition are to be used by Diaz and his handful of supporters against the three-fourths of Nicaraguan population who do not want him as their president. This paraphernalia of war was shipped by the War Department to Diaz against the wishes of the Nicaraguan people—it was shipped with the aid of American marines.

The next step in this fiasco is the appointment of former Secretary of War Stimson to go down to Nicaragua as the personal representative of President Coolidge for the purpose of bringing about some kind of a settlement between the warring factions. Mr. Stimson was well qualified to bring about a settlement; he had headed the military branch of this Government, the branch carrying on war. He accomplished his purpose in Nicaragua—with the aid of American marines. He notified the opponents of Diaz to hand over their arms and ammunition to the American marines or the United States would send a military force to compel them to do so. The State Department then notified the press of the United States that a "settlement" had been reached and things were cleared up. That was true, a settlement had been reached, but 540 of those who opposed it were dead, killed by American marines, and the others driven into the mountains where they were pursued by the marines and airplanes of the United States. About this time, Secretary Kellogg, finding it rather embarrassing to explain the killing of Nicaraguan citizens opposed to Diaz by American marines and airplanes, hit upon the expedient of branding every Nicaraguan opposed to Diaz as a "bandit," and so for several weeks our marines have been pursuing "bandits," even after Stimson's "settlement."

This history of American interference in Nicaragua discloses constant turmoil in that country, constant strife, with the spectacle of representatives of the Department of State intriguing with local despots for the overthrow of governments selected by the people; with Uncle Sam's hands dripping with the blood shed in revolutions he fomented. If this administration is embarrassed at conditions in Nicaragua, the people of the United States may rest assured that those conditions are largely due to the machinations of that very department in following its policy of imperialism in Nicaragua. It is a disgraceful story, one no true American can defend. It has caused the unanimous hostility of the South and Central American Republics toward the United States.

MEXICO

Mr. Speaker, Secretary Kellogg, in his mad desire to impose his will upon other nations, has brought the United States to the brink of war with Mexico. He has sought to force the Government of Mexico to retract its laws concerning the ownership of lands held by American and British oil companies. There seems to be no question but what Mexico had a perfect right to pass whatever laws it deemed wise governing the conditions under which foreign corporations might operate in that country. The records show that by far the greater part of those owning lands affected by the laws in question were willing to abide by them. But one, E. L. Doheny, well-known American oil man, is largely interested in a number of oil companies in Mexico. Upon the passage of these laws his companies called upon the State Department to protest to Mexico.

Nor is this the whole story. Morgan & Co., of New York, with other bankers, underwrote a huge loan to Mexico a few years ago. That loan was in danger when American relations with Mexico became so strained over the oil question, and as a result we now have the spectacle of one of the partners of Morgan & Co. appointed United States ambassador to Mexico. Wall Street now emerges from the front door of the American Embassy in Mexico City. It does not require the intellectual acumen of a genius to deduce from these facts that the loan of Morgan & Co. to Mexico will be protected. Morgan & Co., E. L. Doheny, and Secretary Kellogg, the three figures in the foreground of our conflict with Mexico.

CHINA

The efforts of Secretary Kellogg in China are well known. The liberal Chinese, struggling to free themselves from the economic oppression of foreign exploiters and throw off the yoke of domestic tyranny, find themselves opposed by Uncle Sam's marines. Standard Oil interest in the rich oil fields of China must be protected—with the aid of the American marines. The opium trade, in which Great Britain is so deeply interested and which is one of the chief causes of British soldiers in China, finds itself indirectly protected by American marines lined up to support the British and Japanese. Thousands of American marines, American battleships and American airplanes in China engaged in "protection"; protecting what? Protecting with American lives and American taxpayers' money the strangle hold that the Standard Oil and other foreign capitalists have on the throats of the Chinese people.

It is time there was a new deal in foreign relations of the United States. It is time that the United States assumed a benevolent attitude toward the struggling masses in foreign countries who, not so fortunate as Americans, have not yet tasted the fruits of democracy, and have not become experienced in the science of self-government. It is time America lent a helping hand to those struggling to throw off tyranny instead of stationing its Army and Navy in foreign capitals for the purpose of protecting American financiers bent upon fastening their holds upon the economic life of these people.

Even as American planes bomb the ragged Nicaraguans and American guns cowe the ignorant Chinese, there comes a message of hope from o'er the sea. Sweden has disbanded her armies, Russia proposes to the Council of the League of Nations that they disarm; tear down their forts, dismantle their battleships, and turn loose their soldiers. The American representative at that council is reported by the press to have stated that the matter would be given "careful consideration." Would that America might have led the nations of the world in the Christian movement to abolish war.

Two thousand years ago the greatest Exponent of Peace the world has known offered this formula; He said "Peace on earth, good will toward men." It appears quite evident that our State Department does not subscribe to this Christian creed.

LAYING THE CORNER STONE OF ADDITION TO THE NORTHEASTERN TEACHERS' COLLEGE

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for permission to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the following address was delivered by me at Tahlequah, Okla., on Saturday, November 12, 1927, at the corner-stone laying of the new education building:

We have assembled here to lay the corner stone of this education building, an additional unit to the Northeastern State Teachers' College. It is urgently needed to care for the increased attendance. This added facility will attract greater numbers and enlarge the usefulness of the institution.

We are living in an age of rapid development. We must keep step with the progress of events. To stand still is to retrograde, because the world moves off from us. We are living in both (1) a great Nation, a progressive State, and in (2) an eventful age.

Only 151 years have elapsed since the signing of the Declaration of Independence and 138 years since the institution of an organized stable Government. This is a short time in the life of a nation. We have developed wonderfully. Our population has increased from 3,000,000 to approximately 115,000,000—from 13 original States fringing along the Atlantic coast. We have expanded from ocean to ocean and from Lakes to Gulf and are represented by 48 stars on the field of blue. We builded wisely upon a firm foundation and for the future.

Historically, as a State, we are not yet 20 years old. We were admitted to statehood under unusual circumstances. We first laid our constitutional foundation deep and strong, protecting the individual citizens in their personal liberties and property rights.

We have since vitalized its provisions by legislative enactments to insure those guaranties and to meet the changing needs as they arise. How well we have succeeded a brief comparison and a hurried survey will disclose.

We had a population then of about one and a half million people, attracted here by inviting opportunities. Now we have approximately two and a half million progressive citizens from every State in the Union and almost every foreign country assisting in the development of our wonderful resources.

Instead of crushing the Indian population they were assimilated into the citizenship of the State and Nation, and they are bearing their part in the continued development of the State.

The name of Oklahoma, adopted for our State, means the home of the Red Man. The symbols of the seals of the Five Civilized Tribes were merged into and became a part of the great seal of the State of Oklahoma. This is further evidenced by the purchase of this beautiful site and the original building of this school, formerly the Cherokee Female Seminary, hallowed by the memory of three-fourths of a century, thus perpetuating and enlarging its usefulness, recognizing and capitalizing a sentiment of incalculable educational value to Oklahoma. We to-day rededicate and reconsecrate this institution to a continued and larger service to the entire citizenship of the State and Nation. The remembrance of the splendid influence exerted by the predecessor of this college over the members of a tribe passing into history will ever remain as a continuing challenge to lofty purposes and high ideals.

The country had only been but recently surveyed and allotted. Much of the land was unfenced and a very large part not reduced to tillage. To-day almost every acre of productive land is inclosed and in cultivation, yielding harvests which support its citizenship and in addition pour into the channels of local commerce increasing golden streams from surplus products marketed, adding to the happiness and prosperity of the State and Nation.

We see primitive dwelling houses replaced by comfortable homes. There is a noticeable improvement in livestock and it is a real joy for our eyes to feast upon the splendid thoroughbred cattle and registered hogs placed on exhibition at local and surrounding fairs. The poultry and dairy products once neglected are encouraged and recognized as important agricultural assets. Our fruit culture offers unusual opportunities. We raise all kinds of forage crops.

We have a diversified State. We raise a variety and in abundance all agricultural and allied products. We produced in 1926 wheat valued at $87,019,000; corn valued at $32,260,000; oats valued at $14,172,000. We were third to Texas and Mississippi in the production of cotton—1,760,000 bales valued at $85,360,000. We outrank all States in the production of broomcorn. We now are first in the production of petroleum.

We lead in the production of zinc.

In 1926 we produced minerals of the value of $500,181,000 and were second only to Pennsylvania.

We were eighth in agriculture and second in value in the production of agricultural commodities and minerals combined.

We have discovered coal sufficient to care for the needs of the country for a thousand years. Cheap coal, oil, and gas and potential water power and the production of the raw products means the bringing to our State many of the mills and factories now located in the East and North.

Our climate, water, our minerals, and diversified agricultural lands are inducing increasing numbers to settle and make their homes here, invest their capital, and assist in the further development of our productive State.

The development of our agricultural and mineral resources does not present a satisfying picture of our progress.

We have 6,000 miles of railroads and are developing a splendid system of highways to market our products. Twenty years ago we had impassable roads and trails. We were stopped by swollen streams everywhere. To-day bridges are being built and roads either completed or in course of construction, connecting every community with a market in the principal cities and towns of the country. We have many large cities and towns with every modern convenience.

We must not construct a State founded on material development alone. The moral and educational training must not be neglected. In every city and town and in every rural community Sunday schools are conducted and church services held to care for the spiritual needs of our citizenship.

Our schools for the most part in eastern Oklahoma consisted of those established in cities and towns with but little rural school advantages, except the tribal schools of the Five Civilized Tribes. To-day in every school district in the State we find not only comfortable, well-equipped houses but teachers trained in the latest and most approved methods in the six teachers colleges conveniently located over the State, of which the Northeastern State Teachers College is one.

We have made wonderful strides in the educational development of the State. Our work is just begun. Our expenditures for education is a splendid investment. Statistics show that throughout the Nation we spend annually approximately $2,400,000,000 on education. The demands for this purpose will continue to increase. We can not take a backward step. The provisions for this educational building for the Northeastern State Teachers College is a compliment to the vision of our State legislature. With the added facilities for educational development comes the increased responsibility from those who enjoy its privileges.

Statistics show that 17 per cent of the boys and girls of the Nation do not go beyond the fifth grade. Only 63 per cent enter the eighth grade, and only 34 per cent enter high school, and 14 per cent finish high school and get their diplomas. Out of this number only 7 per cent enter college and only 2 per cent graduate. The other 98 per cent are scattered all along from the fifth grade. It should be the mission and the duty of teachers' colleges to send forth teachers so well equipped who will not only arouse the boys and girls of the cities and towns but accept appointments and be crusaders in the rural communities for the educational, moral, and material development of our country. The teachers are the centers of community life and from them should radiate the influence that will result in rural awakening. Illiteracy should be reduced to a minimum and Oklahoma should take the lead in this respect and outrank her sister States.

Their burning enthusiasm should induce every child of school age to attend school. They should arouse the local communities until they would not be content with anything less than a full school term. They should encourage the boys and girls to thirst for higher educational advantages. Their duty does not end here, but they should be so well equipped in everything that pertains to the material development of rural life as to be of incalculable value in aiding in the comprehensive development of the communities which they serve. They should assist in making every citizen feel the responsibility in doing his part in rendering that service which will better his community and develop the State.

We must not be content in Oklahoma to keep abreast of local environments, but with enlarged vision we must keep pace with the opportunities of the age in which we live. Recent inventions have left us in a state of expectant uncertainty as to the future. Motor transportation in the automobile and in the airplane has replaced the wagon and buggy and to a large extent the railway train. The intrepid Lindbergh, unaided and alone, in 33½ hours rose aloft in New York and landed in Paris, acclaimed as a world hero by the people of every nation and tongue.

The telephone and telegraph are being rapidly supplanted by the wireless and radio. Science and inventive genius are solving the problems of the world, and we must be alert and active to be a part of the progressive spirit of the age. We look to the splendid citizenship of Oklahoma to do their part, and to the progressive leadership of the Northeastern State Teachers College to so equip and train the teachers of the State and Nation that they will so awaken the people of our State to a full sense of their responsibility that they will seize every opportunity.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in House Concurrent Resolution 3, as follows:

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5800, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes; and pending this, I ask unanimous consent that there may be three hours of general debate to be equally divided between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and myself. I have very little demand for time in general debate, and if this request is granted, I shall grant 30 minutes of my one hour and a half to the gentleman from Tennessee to meet the demands which he has. I may also state that to-morrow when we begin the reading of the bill I should like then to present an explanation of the items in the bill and will ask for a little more time than that usually used under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois permit a statement at this point?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am advised by the chairman of the committee on committees of the minority that the report of that committee will be ready to submit to caucus immediately after the adjournent of the House to-morrow afternoon, and therefore a caucus of the minority will be called for that time. We should be pleased if we could be through here by 4.30, but in any event we will meet immediately upon the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that if they are ready at that time and want us to do so, we will adjourn at 4.30 to-morrow afternoon even though we may not have finished consideration of the bill, in order to accommodate the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency bill, and pending that, asks unanimous consent that there may be three hours of general debate equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee knows that every department of the Government and every independent office makes its estimate as to what it shall need for each fiscal year and the Budget passes on the requests and then sends its recommendations as to amounts to the gentleman's committee. The gentleman's committee then passes bills carrying out the recommendations of the Budget, sometimes enlarges them, and grants the appropriations for the fiscal year. We have already passed the supply bills for all departments covering the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928.

After we have passed the annual supply bills, on the third day of this Congress the committee comes in here with this bill appropriating $198,916,264.91, covering deficiencies and supplementary appropriations additional to the Budget.

Now, where is this going to stop? I think the people of the country ought to know exactly what these deficiencies are, what they amount to, not only the ones in this bill we have up during the first three days of the Congress but in the other deficiency bills that will be passed during all the rest of this Congress.

I wish the gentleman would couple with his request, so it will be in shape for future reference, that instead of reading the bill the bill be printed in the RECORD without reading. I shall not object to that. It ought to go in the RECORD, and the people of the country ought to know what the items are for and what they relate to, and where it is going.

What does the bagatelle of expense amount to in printing the bill which carries $198,000,000?

Mr. MADDEN. All right; I have no objection to printing the bill without reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, but that the bill be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes

SEC. 7. This act hereafter may be referred to as the "first deficiency act, fiscal year 1928."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not at this time make the statement that I propose to make in connection with the bill. Later on I will make the statement with reference to these expenditures, and at that time I shall give a very complete explanation of every item in the bill; and I feel quite sure that even the gentleman from Texas will see that every item in the bill is amply justified. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not consume the time of the committee in a general discussion of the pending bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has just stated that later on he will discuss the various provisions of the bill, and he will do so of course with his usual fairness and usual clearness and completeness with which he presents matters to the House. I may say that there are no material differences in the Committee on Appropriations on the provisions of this bill. This bill carries many of the appropriations that were carried in the general deficiency bill at the last session of Congress which failed on account of the filibuster in the Senate during the closing days of that session.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. For a question.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman has stated that the bill failed on account of the filibuster in the Senate. Would he permit a question as to the accuracy of that statement?

Mr. BYRNS. I will withdraw the statement rather than consume the time of the committee if the gentleman objects to it. I stated what I thought was the accepted fact. Those appropriations not carried in this bill have either been entirely eliminated or left to be included in the regular annual bills which will be reported at a later date.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. For a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. There were items in the last deficiency bill which are not in this bill, for instance with reference to the public buildings—will they be reported in a bill later?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; in the regular appropriation bills. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] later on will explain very fully the provisions of this bill and state to the House what the intentions are with reference to the items to which the gentleman refers. The failure of the deficiency bill caused considerable inconvenience and embarrassment to a number of governmental activities which had not been provided with sufficient money to carry them to the beginning of the next fiscal year which began July 1, at which time the appropriations for the fiscal year of 1928 went into effect.

Since the President declined to accede to what appeared to be a popular demand and call Congress into extra session to provide the necessary funds, to meet the demands, it was necessary to resort to various subterfuges, and in some cases actual violation of the law, to carry on some of the activities. For example, some $38,000,000 was necessary to pay pensions in June and some $35,000,000 was required to meet deficiencies in May and June for the Veterans' Bureau. The Comptroller General ruled that these sums might be borrowed from the 1928 appropriations, but since the appropriations did not become available until July 1, I fail to see just how they could be borrowed to be used prior to that date. Neither do I see how the Comptroller General could justify the application for 1927 of appropriations which had been specifically designated by Congress for 1928.

The great Mississippi flood which occurred last spring destroyed many lives and millions of dollars worth of property. After the flood had subsided crevasses were left in the levees, which constituted an actual menace to life and property in the event of further rains.

It was necessary to close them. The Mississippi Flood Commission had $5,000,000 to expend for that purpose, but that was not sufficient. Two million dollars more was needed, and because an extra session of Congress was not called by the President, the Secretary of War was compelled to take that money from the 1928 appropriations for rivers and harbors.

This bill restores these and other sums, and to that there is certainly no objection, but it was a plain violation of law, and no one denies it. I do not say this in captious criticism. The purpose for which the money was applied was worthy and necessary, and not a dollar was lost to the Treasury by such action. Neither do I call attention to this in a partisan spirit, but I call attention to it at this time for the purpose of entering an earnest protest against what has appeared to be an increasing encroachment upon the rights and functions of Congress by the executive branch of the Government. This encroachment of the Executive on the prerogatives and privileges of the Congress has been going on for many years. Only last year when the hurricane occurred in Florida the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, took $250,000 from the appropriations for the foot-and-mouth disease and loaned it for the purpose of buying seed—a commendable object, perhaps, but no less a plain violation of law and a plain disregard of the Constitution, which gives to Congress alone the right to make appropriations and to say how they shall be applied. The responsibility must rest with the Executive. I have no criticism to make of the Secretary of War or of anyone who sat in with him in advising him as to the borrowing of this $2,000,000 from the river and harbor fund. Lives were at stake, possibly, and, of course, that should take precedence over everything else. This was and is a national problem, one that concerns the whole country, but I repeat that the responsibility for this violation of law rests alone with the Chief Executive. He could have called an extra session of Congress without expense, and there was a general demand that he should do so, and these appropriations would have been legally and properly provided had he done so. We have a very strong suspicion that the reasons for not doing so were political. There would have been no expense, as I say, in calling Congress together, because the salaries of Members and of the officials of the House and Senate are paid whether Congress is in session or not. True, had Congress been called in session a majority would probably have insisted upon staying here through the summer months and upon giving that relief which is so much needed by the farmers, depriving Members and officials of pleasant summer vacations.

Other important legislation, which might have been equally embarrassing to the administration, might have been considered. But better that than to force a situation which compelled a disruption of the orderly and constitutional procedure of Government, and which tends to weaken the respect of the administration officials for the laws which should govern them in the discharge of their duties. All laws, of course, should be observed. No one is above the law. The higher the official, the more careful he should be to respect the law. No one has a right to disregard one law any more than another. We can not inculcate obedience to law unless we ourselves respect all laws, whether important or otherwise. Example is more essential than precept.

Mr. Chairman, I do not say this in a partisan spirit. I am simply appealing to Congress to preserve its own constitutional rights and to let it be understood in the future that it will not permit those rights to be encroached upon by executive officials. The safety of our Government lies in keeping the three branches of our Government distinct and separate, each performing its functions under the Constitution, and each jealous of encroachment by the others.

Congress is in large measure responsible for this gradual assumption of its powers by the executive branch, and the consequent lessening of public confidence, and I was about to say respect. The executive branch has been magnified in importance at the expense of the legislative branch. Only yesterday I read what purported to be an interview with the majority leader of this House, in which he heartily indorsed a bill proposed by the chairman of a committee of this House in which it is proposed to surrender and turn over for all time to come the constitutional prerogative and power of the House to apportion its own Members to a member of the Cabinet, who is not even responsible to the people.

For six years Congress has been unable for one reason or another to dispose of the $150,000,000 investment at Muscle Shoals, Ala. Yet we have to-day in face of that fact a proposition pending to expend $125,000,000 upon another dam on another great river. Congress should take up the Muscle Shoals matter one way or the other, without further delay. If I had the time I could point to numerous laws in which Congress has delegated its powers to boards and commissions appointed by the President and under which the executive departments are given the power to frame regulations which have the full force and effect of law.

Mr. Chairman, I have been led to submit these brief remarks not in opposition to the items in the bill restoring the funds so used to those from which they were taken, and certainly not in criticism of the amounts or manner in which they were expended, but simply to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that this violation of the law for a most worthy purpose could have been avoided if Congress had been called into extra session, and to express the hope that Congress will in the future more jealously guard its rights and prerogatives from encroachment, and thus regain the prestige which we are told in newspaper editorials and other published articles it has lost to some extent by its own voluntary surrender in recent years.

I am not going to discuss at this time the Budget which has just been presented to the House. At some future day after an opportunity to analyze it I shall ask the privilege of the House to discuss it.

May I say in conclusion that the Budget estimate for 1929 just submitted amounts to $4,238,793,765.53. This is $305,311,765.06 more than the appropriations for 1928. Without exception the cost of every department of the Government, of every governmental establishment in the Government, is and has been steadily increasing during the past years despite the claim of economies and reductions made. [Applause.] The President has several times taken the opportunity very seriously to criticize the increasing cost of State and municipal administration. That criticism could be as well applied to the cost of the United States Government under his own administration. Doctor Coué recommended his famous cure for only physical ills. He has not claimed for it that by simply saying, "Every day in every way expenses are growing smaller and smaller" will actually bring about a reduction in governmental expenses unless some definite action is taken by the administration to make good its claims. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used exactly 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. In considering the items for deficiencies in the State Department expenditures, which will be found in the bill now before us, I would like to philosophize a bit on various matters "touching on and appertaining to" the foreign relations and activities of the State Department, to cabbages and kings, to ambassadors and Americanism, to legations and lickspittles, to snobs and secretaries, and to that mess of pottage of bunk and betrayal, treachery and toadyism, falsehood and flapdoodle, insincerity and insolence, embraced under the comprehensive name of American diplomacy, for which we pay so liberally.

In older and more robust days America gave the world what was called "shirt-sleeve diplomacy," rough, resolute, and productive of results. To-day we have "shirt-tail diplomacy" [laughter], suave, servile, socially serviceable abroad, nationally noxious at home, that crooks the pregnant hinges of the knee in alien courts and capitals and shows the abashed American the door.

In the good old days, when this Republic was a congeries of colonies, an ambassador was a well-paid Ananias, who lied for his king and country, and spent his time smelling, spying, suborning, and slandering the nation he was accredited to; and though his methods and morals were dubious, his love of and loyalty to his country were above doubt and beyond question. He went out of fashion with wigs and powder. American diplomacy and diplomats are something else and marked by mediocrity, misfits, and millions.

American ambassadors for monetary merit from Bradstreet, and the black and blue books of our financial centers, wherein those who can afford butlers and bay windows are listed and whose philanthropy and patriotism shine in the ledgers of the Republican National Committee, adorn our legations abroad. All else, I say, with the exception of Bradstreet and the Republican National Committee, is leather and prunella [laughter]; culture, knowledge of peoples and languages, tact, good manners, and trifles of that sort are needless, provided the ladies of the legation can chatter and tango and are garnished with French dressing, and the ambassador is gilded, gastronomically generous, and willing to spend and scatter and souse the socially select. [Laughter.]

The old-style dollar diplomat, who sported spinach and used tobacco as a diet is in the museum; the 1927 ambassador goes in for cigarettes, safety razors, safety first, and social eminence, and is visible to the naked eyes of only those wandering Americans bearing mandates from Republican magnates. For all others—the air, the landscape, the department of the exterior. [Laughter.]

The real business of the legations, their habits, customs, usages, tone, table manners, and rules and regulations for the treatment of visiting Americans are provided by chargés d'affaires, secretaries, clerks, valets, flunkies, and minor parasites, mostly resentful aliens, attached to the pay rolls. Their job is to appraise American callers, separate the sheep from the goats, give the elect the administration hand and smile, administer the boot and the "bum's rush" to the unworthy [laughter], apologize for being Americans, and shudder when the American flag and Republic are mentioned. Almost all legations have one thing in common—contempt for the country they serve and a slavering sycophancy for the country they are serving in. For diplomats and their attachés the waters of the Atlantic Ocean, like those of the ancient River Styx, have a strange chemical action on heart and brain; the trip overseas causes them to abjure their native land and transforms them into the most ardent Germans in Germany, the most intense Frenchmen in France, the most effusive Britons in Anglo-Saxony, all of them into denatured Americans [laughter], ashamed of America, and apologetic of all things American. They misrepresent the dignity and honor of the Republic and seem only to reflect the spirit and sentiment of expatriate America, of those so-called American colonies in European capitals made up of exiles and bankrupts, "demireps," and detrimentals and those who have left America for America's good. What can we do, my colleagues, with such misrepresentatives? Protected by the civil service and the Republican Party, how can we get rid of them? Cut them off at the Treasury or what? God knows; I do not! [Laughter.]

Recently the mayor of the greatest city in America visited Europe and was honorably received on his tour everywhere by all except the diplomatic representatives of his own country. Our ambassador to France, at home in Ohio and sick, was represented in Paris by the chargé d'affaires, one Sheldon Whitehouse, who promptly put detectives on his trail to try and get something on this mayor who was a member of Tammany Hall, a political body not in sympathy with the party in power here in our own America. Think of it, brethren! The American legation turned into a spy agency to discredit a distinguished American citizen. Rather a base and contemptible piece of diplomacy, methinks. My old college friend, the ambassador to the Court of St. James, fled to the Highlands of Scotland to avoid meeting the distinguished tourist. [Laughter.] Valiant enough to face a Scotch stag, his courage failed him at the thought of the Tammany tiger [laughter]; but the visitor was met at the legation by an underling with an English accent so blamed English and so unlike anything American, that he congratulated the legation secretary upon his Anglicization, much to that comic official's embarrassment.

In Ireland he was fortunate in meeting an American minister, who is an American 24 hours a day and 365 days a year, Frederick A. Sterling, our representative in the Irish Free State [applause], where Americans are popular, and where every citizen is a potential American [laughter], and where it is dangerous to belittle or apologize for America. I would we had more Sterling Americans in our diplomatic service and fewer Whitehouses of ill fame to make us blush for the honor and good name of America.

I hate to vote away good American money for bad American diplomatic service, for those who misrepresent us, who injure our good name abroad and our pride at home, men unwilling or unable to defend and strengthen our policies and purposes abroad; and I wish we could rid ourselves of diplomatic detrimentals.

I honor the White House here in Washington; but I should like to see the Paris Whitehouse booted out of the diplomatic service of America, in sæcula sæculorum. [Continued applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. The gentleman has given a magnificent address in regard to the matter of the welfare of our country, abroad particularly. It is a timely utterance, and if the gentleman will permit me, I wish to congratulate him on a great speech delivered with more than his accustomed eloquence. The gentleman who preceded him [Mr. BYRNS] made reference to the flood situation in the Mississippi Valley. The people who live in that vast region of our country sympathize with the people of New England in their recent disaster, and I am quite sure Congress will do all in its power to alleviate the sufferings and losses of that flood catastrophe. May I ask the gentleman what is the attitude of the people of his great historic section with reference to the flood-control problem of the Mississippi Valley and the responsibility of the National Government to meet that problem fully, completely, and exclusively, so as to make for a unified control instead of the present system of dual control and local contribution?

Mr. GALLIVAN. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Louisiana, I must say that I can hardly speak for all the people of my section of the country, but I can speak for the greatest Democratic district in all America. [Applause.] My people believe that the Mississippi River disaster is a national problem. [Applause.] They believe that the right arm of Uncle Sam should be lifted in every exigency to do its level best by their fellow countrymen who abut on the Mississippi River. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts yields back 10 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Tennessee can use more time now if he desires, or with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire at this time to prepare the way for an amendment which I understand will be offered this afternoon or to-morrow by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], with a view to striking out of the deficiency bill now before the House certain language which the Committee on Appropriations inserted, to the effect that no part of the sum of $5,635,000 for the reconstruction and repair of two battleships shall be used in elevating the guns of those two ships.

It appears that the Committee on Appropriations, in doing this little thing, is constituting unto itself a supreme power which the rules of the House do not contemplate. Congress last February enacted a law which authorized the appropriation of $13,150,000 for the reconstruction and repair of two of our first-line battleships, the Oklahoma and the Nevada. Remember, my friends, that both of these ships are slower than every single battleship in the British and the Japanese navies. Remember also, my friends, that every battleship that Japan owns and every battleship that England owns can shoot from 2,000 to 11,000 yards farther than these ships can.

Now, Congress in its wisdom has determined that by expending $13,000,000 on these two ships we can put them in absolutely first-class condition, so that they will be prepared to go out and defend the best interests of this country against anything that floats. The Committee on Appropriations in their wisdom or unwisdom have provided $1,300,000 for these ships for protection against submarine and aircraft attack. They provide for further reboilering these ships $1,200,000, and for new fire control $865,000. But in the name of Heaven, what good is the fire control that directs the big guns when your projectiles can not reach the target? Not worth a damn. But that is exactly what the Committee on Appropriations has brought to this House for its consideration.

Of course, if Congress is going to authorize expenditures by a vote in this House of 266 to 111, and then the Committee on Appropriations says, "Well, we in our wisdom have determined that this authorization shall be null and void; we will not appropriate the money"; if the Committee on Appropriations is going to assume that attitude, then all the other committees of the House which authorize expenditures might just as well go out of business. If the guns of our ships, the Oklahoma and the Nevada, are elevated from their present 15° to 30° their efficiency will be increased in fire from their big guns just 50 per cent. In other words, by a small expenditure they will be enabled to elevate their guns so that they will have a greater trajectory, which will increase their range from 21,000 yards to 31,000 yards.

Now, if the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is anything at all, he is one of the best and fairest business men on earth. I have always thought so But I can not understand how in the name of good business we are asked to authorize $865,000 for improving gun-fire control, which is only one-half of the amount necessary—$1,730,000—to make gun fire more accurate on these two ships.

If we are going to expend $1,730,000 for improving range finding on these ships, why not improve the efficiency of the guns themselves? Change in elevation does not change the character of the gun. It is the same gun on substantially the same gun carriage. We merely change the carriage slightly, so as to permit elevating the guns from 15° to 30°. That greater trajectory provided in the higher angle of fire gives 10,000 yards greater range, or approximately 5 miles. I can not for the life of me see why we are asked to spend $1,730,000 for fire control of guns which are outranged by every big gun in the British and Japanese Navies, unless we couple with that appropriation the elevation of the gun itself, so we can shoot as far as our British and Japanese friends.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think perhaps the gentleman has answered the question already. The gentleman made the statement that the British guns can shoot 31,000 yards?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. The Oklahoma and the Nevada shoot but 21,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the elevation of the guns give us 10,000 additional yards?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; 10,000 yards additional.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the life of this ship?

Mr. BRITTEN. It is due to be replaced in 1936 under the terms of the Washington treaty.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That applies to the two ships we are talking about?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; to the two ships we are talking about.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. After the results of the Geneva conference, has the gentleman any idea as to the reason why the Committee on Appropriations is not in favor of raising the guns? Is it a question of economy?

Mr. BRITTEN. It is probably a question of economy, but the economy comes in such bad grace when in one line we contemplate an expenditure of $1,730,000 to improve gunfire, and then in the next line we say that no part of this sum shall be expended toward improving gun ranges on these ships. The whole matter, from my point of view, is so hard to understand. If it is economy only, then it is the rankest kind of economy, because it will result in destroying the value of two first-class ships which under the treaty of Washington we can not replace until 1936.

Mr. CONNERY. I just wish to say that I am in hearty agreement with the gentleman. Not only should we raise the elevation of the guns, but I think the United States should have the best Navy and strongest Navy in the world and not a Navy based on the 5–5–3 ratio.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Were these vessels constructed before the Washington conference?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Why was there not a sufficient elevation given to the guns then?

Mr. BRITTEN. Because in those days we did not have the benefit of spotting our shots from the air. Now we can shoot 30,000 yards or 31,000 yards, much over the horizon, with very great accuracy. That is made possible by the use of airplanes, which give instant accurate returns on every shot at the longest possible ranges. That is the great reason for improving our guns.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How long will it take to make these alterations?

Mr. BRITTEN. A year and a half.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Are treaty rights involved in raising the elevation of the guns?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. Of course, there are some gentlemen on the floor of this House, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is one of them, who say that the Washington treaty will be violated if we do this reconstruction work; but the then Secretary of State who negotiated the Washington treaty, Charles Evans Hughes, has in a written opinion declared that this alteration is not a violation of the Washington treaty.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish the gentleman would put that opinion in the RECORD, because I do not find it at any place.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have it, dated January 6, 1925:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, January 6, 1925.

Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, transmitting House Resolution 387 and requesting that the information therein described should be furnished if not incompatible with the public interest.

This proposed resolution asked for "such data, information, or objections" which the Secretary of State "may have from any foreign government in connection with the modernization of certain capital ships of the United States Navy by increasing the elevation and range of turret guns."

While I understand that the resolution has not been passed, there is no objection to giving to your committee the information desired. The only "data, information, and objections" which the Department of State has received from any foreign government relating to the increase of the elevation and range of turret guns are as follows:

In a communication under date of March 15, 1923, the British ambassador at Washington reviewed the reports that had been made as to the increase in the elevation of the turret guns of British ships, and made the categorical declaration that no alteration had been made in the elevation of turret guns of any British capital ships since they were first placed in commission.

In subsequent communications from the British ambassador at Washington it has been stated to be the view of His Majesty's Government that an increase in the elevation of turret guns is not permissible under the terms of the naval treaty, with special reference to Chapter II, part 3, Section I (d) which prohibits, subject to certain exceptions expressly provided for, any reconstruction of retained capital ships or of aircraft carriers, except for the purpose of providing means of defense against air and submarine attack. As regards the question whether such increase in the elevation of turret guns involves any "reconstruction," it is stated to be the view of the British Government that the increase of the elevation of guns, together with consequential alterations such as scrapping or replacement of existing fire-control systems, etc., involves considerable "reconstruction" in the fullest sense of the term. The British Government lay particular emphasis upon what is described as a larger aspect of the question; that is to say that one of the objects of the treaty is to reduce the burdens of competition in armament, and the British Government feel that action by the United States in the elevation of turret guns would tend to defeat this object to a considerable extent. In these circumstances the British Government make an earnest appeal that the Government of the United States should not impose upon the peoples of the countries concerned the burdens of competition in armament which are deemed to result from the execution of the proposal to elevate the turret guns on retained capital ships of the United States, it being considered that even if arguments can be found in support of the contrary interpretation of the treaty, the effect of carrying out such proposals would be incompatible with its intentions. The assurance is repeated that no alteration has been made in the elevation of the turret guns of any existing British capital ships since they were first placed in commission. It was further proposed that the Government of the United States, the Japanese Government, and the British Government (the Governments of France and Italy not being deemed to be directly concerned in view of the exceptions of the treaty) should undertake not to make during the term of the treaty any increase in the elevation of the turret guns of their existing capital ships.

I have been informed by the Japanese Government that it was not the view of the Japanese Government that a change in the gun elevations, which did not require changes of the prohibited sort to the ships themselves, would be a violation of the naval treaty.

I may add that, in view of the detailed description given by the Navy Department of the nature of the changes which would be necessary to elevate the turret guns on the capital ships retained by the United States, these changes appear to be of a minor sort, and, in my opinion, would not constitute a reconstruction of the ships within the meaning which should be attributed to the provision of the naval treaty. I am of the opinion, however, that while such changes as would be contemplated in the case of American ships would not constitute a violation of the terms of the treaty, they would tend to evoke the competition which it has been the policy of this Government to mitigate. It may also be stated that so far as the United States is concerned the question appears to be of consequence only in relation to certain of the specified retained ships, and these ships under the replacement clauses of the treaty are to be replaced within 10 or 12 years.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

When Ramsay MacDonald was Premier of England he was quoted as being opposed to the elevation of our turret guns. He said that it was in conflict with the spirit of the Washington treaty, but our own Secretary of State, Charles Evans Hughes, has subsequently given an opinion to the contrary. I believe Members of the House will insist, as I do, that the time has not yet come for Great Britain or any other power to interpret that treaty for us.

The intent of the treaty was clear in that the British and American navies were to be equal in capital ships. It is absurd to argue equality when every British ship is superior to ours in speed and gun range.

If the English-speaking nations are to maintain the peace of the world, they can do so only as equals, for America and American citizenship will not accept inferiority. A warship outranged and outsped can neither hit nor run away.

Here is another point I would like to bring to the attention of the House, not about gun elevation, but as affecting the Navy itself. Every ship in the British Navy has superior speed over these ships and every ship in the Japanese Navy has superior speed over these ships. Now, with their superior speed, in the event of an emergency or a conflict, they can select their range and their speed and blow us out of the seas, just as the British did the Germans at the battle of Falkland Islands. I do not see any trouble ahead between the United States and England. It is unthinkable by most Americans and British alike. War or a conflict between the United States and Japan is equally out of the question, but it is my belief, and it has been so determined by the Members of the House of Representatives in their vote last session of 266 to 111, that if we are going to keep these ships in commission, their guns should be elevated and the highest possible efficiency maintained, and if we do not want to do that let us strike this appropriation out of this appropriation bill, this entire $5,635,000. We should not spend a dollar of this money if we are not going to permit these guns to shoot as far as other guns can shoot, for if an enemy can hit you and you can not hit him, you are simply out of the fight entirely.

This is not a question of rivalry between the United States and Great Britain, and it is not a question of rivalry between the United States and Japan. It is simply a question of making these two ships efficient. If you are going to spend $6,500,000 on each of them, not on both of them—if you are going to spend $6,500,000 on each of them—let us improve their gun fire; let us improve their efficiency in an emergency and let us provide for the elevation of all their guns. If we do not do that, we might as well strike the entire amount out of the deficiency bill, and I will be for that if this language is retained in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the Navy General Board has repeatedly gone on record for elevating the guns on our 13 ships which are outranged and outsped by both Great Britain and Japan. The Bureau of the Budget has recommended to Congress that it make appropriation toward elevating the guns for the Oklahoma and the Nevada. Congress itself has acted on this very item by a vote of 266 to 111 in the House and an almost unanimous vote in the Senate. To refuse to appropriate at this time would be to deny to 1,200 officers and men on each ship the right to properly defend themselves and their country in an emergency. Surely there is no answer to the argument that the country's defenders in an emergency should not be equipped on the sliding scale of economy. When the time comes to shoot, let us be prepared with the best that money can buy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I merely wish to take this one minute in order to call attention, especially the attention of the Ways and Means Committee, to the fact that I have introduced a bill to-day asking Congress to extend the time for the application of ex-service men for the soldiers' bonus from January 1, 1928, to January 1, 1929. This bill will go to the Ways and Means Committee, and if it does not pass Congress before January 1, 1928, 500,000 service men and their dependents will be unable to apply for the bonus. I hope the Ways and Means Committee will see fit to pass favorably on this bill and report it to the House in time to be passed before January 1 and thus protect the service men and their dependents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, there is one subject about which more desk men have much to say than any other in the world. Frequently the less they know the more they talk and the more expert they think their advice. This has been the greatest natal year of history for frantic actions and foolish words on the subject of agriculture.

Last summer Nathan Adams, a noted banker of Dallas, Tex., in his cloistered wisdom from behind a mahogany desk, gave utterance to a remarkable statement in the form of an interview.

TWENTY-CENT COTTON

A higher price than 20 cents for cotton, says Mr. Adams, "would cause a false wave of prosperity and end in a spending spree that would offset the profits made."

What a discovery! In other words, according to this sage of the money counter, the way to keep the wholly irresponsible farmer from becoming intoxicated with his own prosperity and indulging in a "spending spree" is to force him to sell his cotton for not more than 20 cents. If the fleecy staple advances beyond 20 cents, the old boy might become too frisky and, who knows, might buy a victrola or a radio or even put linoleum on the kitchen floor. Shades of Benjamin Franklin and his Poor Richard's Almanac!

If that had been said by a man who lived in an industrial center and who had never seen a farm it would even then have been surprising; but when its author lives in the premier agricultural State of the Union, producing commodities that are the basis of even his own prosperity, it is amazing. It simply staggers credulity.

MR. ADAMS AGAIN

This self-appointed guardian of the farmers' rights is further quoted as saying that—the 1927 crop of cotton in Texas will reach nearly 4,000,000 bales, and to sell at 20 cents the farmer would make a nice profit and be enabled to pay off outstanding debts.

That is the big idea. Enough to pay our debts. I suppose he thinks if we get more than that we are likely to get unruly and throw a monkey wrench into the orderly machinery that weaves the business fabric. So long as we can get 20 cents, or just enough to pay our debts, everything will be lovely, and we should be satisfied.

What a strange and cruel philosophy! What right has the farmer to have a comfortable home, to have modern conveniences, to have money in the bank, to have some of the better things that appeal to the finer side of our natures? What right has he to want a well-stocked farm, with no mortgage on it to fret away his life and destroy his independence? What right has he to want to provide for the care and education of his children? Ask Mr. Adams.

PRICE FOR A PERIOD OF YEARS

If the farmer always received 20 cents for his cotton and a similar price for his other products, that would be a different story. It is easy for the man who draws his fixed percentage regardless of the seasons, in bad as well as in good times, to philosophize about the other man's business.

But everyone with a grain of practical knowledge knows that the farmer must face the uncertainties of the season, the drought, the rainy spell, the problem of overproduction, and a thousand other worries. He does not know whether he will make anything, and if he does, whether it will be worth anything. In good years he must recoup the losses of bad years, if he can.

Over a period of years cotton has sold for below a 20-cent average. Last year it sold for 10 and 12 cents and even lower. Where was Mr. Adams then?

HE DID NOT THINK

The trouble with the banker was he did not think. He thought he was thinking when he was not. He had been reading in his banker's journal what some scissor-tailed fellow, who had never seen a cotton patch or a wheat field, had to say, and he thought he was a modern Columbus discovering a new America. It was the plainest sort of propaganda, and he fell for it like a child reaching for the moon.

True, Mr. Adams, after he had been blistered on all sides, made a belated explanation, claiming he had been misquoted and misunderstood. But in the explanation he talked about everything except what had been in the original interview. He seemed to want to get as far away from that as possible, and I do not blame him much.

In Dallas there is an organization known as the "Bonehead Club," to which they elect men who pull prize boneheads. Mr. Adams should be elected unanimously and his membership dated back to the beginning, so he could be officially referred to as a charter member.

Mr. HASTINGS. Or made president of it.

Mr. JONES. Yes; probably made president of it, as my friend suggests.

The Dallas banker is not the only one who has held to those views. Like the parrot he talked too much, but he is only one of a good many who have been misled by propaganda from selfish parties, whose interests conflict with the interests of the Nation at large. Why smart men fall for it is a mystery, but somehow they sometimes do.

SPECULATORS IN FARM PRODUCTS

Why didn't he carry his argument to New York and Chicago and try it out on the cotton speculators and the wheat gamblers. They made cotton fluctuate above 20 cents and then below 20 cents, and the farmer lost both ways. This wild speculation in the farmer's products should be stopped.

The cotton farmer has been struggling for years against burdens, debts, and losses; then just about the time it looked like prices were about to get to the point where he could pay a portion of these debts and losses, the Department of Agriculture gave out a prediction of lower prices and the market broke several dollars per bale, causing millions in losses to the South.

Then, as the prices were slowly recovering, the department gave out another statement to the effect that the carry-over would be 7,800,000 bales, and prices tumbled again. Why they gave out these figures is a mystery. Manifestly they are too high—800,000 bales higher than the estimate made by even the interested buyers. Again, why did they give the carry-over in bulk, including the nonmerchantable cotton?

DID NOT FOLLOW THE LAW

During the last session a law was passed, of which law I was the joint author, and am therefore familiar with its provisions. It provided that the nonmerchantable cotton should be listed separately from the merchantable. During the last few years considerable nontenderable and nonmerchantable cotton has accumulated. Of course it depresses the market the same as if it were good cotton. The purpose of this law is to require the department to make their carry-over reports show how much is merchantable cotton. If the department officials were not ready as yet to completely list such cotton, they might either have deferred their estimate or have explained that their estimate included a considerable amount of nontenderable cotton. But they did not do this. They bulked it all together and at the same time gave an estimate that was manifestly too high. Why did they do this, when they are supposed to promote the welfare of the farmer?

THE SECRETARY INDORSES THE BLUNDER

To cap it all, the Secretary of Agriculture, instead of correcting these glaring mistakes, gave out two or three interviews in which he attempted to justify them. It was terrible to make them, but the public was inclined to attribute them to some irresponsible employee. However, when the Secretary indorsed them, they were astonished. No greater blunder has been made by the Department since it was established.

Personally, I like Secretary Jardine. He is a man of much ability. But I think this action on his part clearly qualifies him for membership in the aforementioned Bonehead Club. [Laughter.]

PICTURE FARMERS

But these are not the only men who live in a land of make-believe in reference to the farmer's interests.

One can not help recalling the picture of the President pitching hay, wearing at the same time a pair of overalls drawn over black dress trousers and a white shirt—bareheaded in the August sunshine. The black trousers clearly show through the side slits of the overalls. It was all in the presence of the camera—that is why it was taken. Of course, this was all right, but it could not give him an insight into the problems of agriculture.

SHOULD SEE THE REAL FARMER

Oh, Mr. Banker, and Mr. Secretary, and Mr. President, I wish you would get away occasionally from the industrial centers, the smokestacks, and financial wizards; out in the South and West, out where they actually produce cotton and wheat and cattle and hogs; not under the click of the camera, but in the atmosphere of reality. Go out and pitch some real hay, pick some cotton under southern skies, and shock or harvest some wheat in the western fields, or at least see how it is done. Then perhaps you will be in a better position to give the farmers some advice. There amid the toil and the sun and the mortgages you will see the injustice of the ultrahigh tariff schedules which destroy the market for his products and enhance the price of his supplies, that force him to sell in a low market where he is not permitted to buy. Then you will see the wrong of special favors to anyone or any section—the rank injustice of it all.

ENOUGH TO PAY HIS DEBTS

Why, Mr. Adams, if you had gotten some facts before you spoke, you would have known that cotton at even 30 cents would not pay one-fourth of the outstanding mortgage indebtedness of Texas farms, and that indebtedness is less than the average of the States. Cotton this year at 20 or even 30 cents would pay only a small part of it, even though it were all profit. The same is true of farms all over the Nation.

EQUALITY

I want to see enough prosperity on the farm and prices high enough for the payment of debts and the ending of the high interest rates. Then with laws which grant special favors repealed, real prosperity in its full measure will come to the farm. With debts paid and mortgages lifted, there will be occasion for rejoicing, and the happy hillsides will be the scene of a great jubilee.

When every farmer in the South shall eat bread from his own fields and meat from his own pastures, and disturbed by no creditor and enslaved by no debt, shall sit among his teeming gardens and orchards and vineyards and dairies and barnyards, pitching his crops in his own wisdom and growing them in independence, making cotton his clean surplus and selling it in his own time and in his chosen manner and not a master's bidding—getting his pay in cash and not a receipted mortgage that discharges his debt, but does not restore his freedom—then shall be breaking the fullness of our day.

Those burning words of Henry Grady, true 38 years ago, are true to-day and will be true to-morrow.

The farmer has a right to expect prices that year upon year average enough to pay his current debts, and profit enough to live decently and make payment on his mortgage indebtedness. The industrious farmer has the same right as other men to plan for the care and education of his children.

Over these ramparts of equality the farmer has planted his flag, the emblem of his faith and hope. And the Adamses and the Jardines shall not tear it down. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 55 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Tennessee has that much time left.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield one-half hour of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am completing 11 years of active service in Congress. Organized labor has realized at last that I am not its enemy but am one of its most valuable friends. Without exception I have vigorously supported all of its worthy proposals, opposing only such as were inimical to the public good.

During the war our Government paid all industrial workers tremendous wages, yet 6,000 strikes occurred. They were exempt from draft because needed to work. I voted to make them either "work or fight." (2) When Congress gave the extra $240 bonus to our 100,000 Government employees in Washington I voted that during war they should work eight instead of only seven hours per day. (3) I contended that the Government should retain its right to supervise the work of its employees in its navy yards and arsenals. (4) I protested against unions dominating our Government legislatively. (5) I opposed unions forcing all Government employees to unionize and pay dues against their will. (6) I warned President Samuel Gompers that if he would preserve his unions, which meant much to labor, he must repudiate the anarchy and communism pervading them and free them of such menaces as William Z. Foster. In all such acts I was the true friend and not the enemy of labor. And before he died President Gompers did publicly repudiate Foster, anarchy, and communism, and recently his successor, President William Green, has likewise repudiated them. Yet, in those strenuous times during and following the war, because I dared to do my duty President Gompers denounced me as an enemy to labor and did everything within his power to destroy me and get me out of Congress. In the 1920 campaign such reputable and reliable authority as Editor Lloyd B. Thomas asserted in his Times that approximately $100,000 was spent in my district to defeat me. The Advance, published by Don Biggers at Olden, carried pages of attacks against me in practically every issue, Samuel Gompers having one whole page therein over his own signature. But many of the finest citizens in my district are members of union labor and for years had been my strong, personal friends and knew that they could depend upon me to give labor a square deal in all of its worthy undertakings, and they loyally supported me. Then a union publication asserted that—if they could not defeat me at the polls they would find some other means of getting me out of Congress.

I have felt that it is our duty to know all about our Government's business. Many Congressmen do not know where half of our 225 bureaus, commissions, and independent offices of the Government are located, and hardly anything about their activities. When a Member carefully and properly investigates any of them, his findings reported in detail should always be helpful to Congress. In order to familiarize myself with the intimate details of their business and to learn just where all of the people's tax money goes, I have carefully investigated every bureau in Washington, but to do so I have used practically all of my vacations for 11 years.

In 1921 numerous employees, some being helpless women, appealed to me for protection, asserting that while through civil service they could easily obtain Government positions, yet unions would not let them continue long in employment unless they joined and paid the prescribed union dues. Naturally, I investigated such conditions.

In May, 1921, certain of the 4,450 employees then in our Government Printing Office appealed to me for protection, asserting that unions controlled the plant and required all employees to join the union, pay its monthly dues and assessments, and in addition to pay the required extra 10 per cent of their salaries to carry on the nation-wide strike for the 44-hour week. It being my duty to do so, I investigated this plant. I found conditions in this plant, which in conjunction with conditions in other departments, that should be publicly known. I believed that such conditions were so outrageous and important that my colleagues in both the House and the Senate would highly appreciate my bringing such facts before them. There was but one way to acquaint the 96 Senators and the other 434 Congressmen with such facts, and that was to print same in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for their information.

So before preparing my report, from the floor of the House, on October 4, 1921, I requested the House to grant me permission to print my report in the RECORD as an "extension of remarks," and such permission was unanimously granted.

And in the back of the RECORD for October 22, 1921, as "extension of remarks," I printed such report, which I had dated October 21, 1921. In same I quoted a letter from an employee, Millard French, to the Public Printer, duly sworn to by French, which embraced improper language, which I deleted in the same manner official court reports are printed. With the exception of this quoted letter, there was not one word in my entire report that was in any way improper or subject to criticism. Omitting this objectionable letter, I want to read you the balance of my report that is not objectionable.

I now read same from pages 7417 to 7425 of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as it was originally printed on October 22, 1921, to wit:

THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

EXTENSION OF REMARKS OF HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON, OF TEXAS, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1921

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have proven my friendship for the Public Printer, Mr. George H. Carter, on numerous occasions by taking the floor in his defense whenever his efforts to bring order out of chaos and to economize and improve conditions in his department have been criticized. I have stood by and applauded when he has accomplished results. And along some lines he has been successful, working wonderful improvement. In other respects he has failed. And I feel deeply grateful to my colleagues for unanimously permitting me (RECORD, p. 6678) to discuss conditions as they really exist in this, the largest printing establishment in the whole world.

5,107 EMPLOYEES OCTOBER 6, 1919

On October 6, 1919, there were 5,107 employees on the pay roll of the Government Printing Office. Their annual salaries ranged from $6,000 to the Public Printer, $3,600 each to 5 employees, $3,000 each to 8 employees, $2,700 each to 65 employees, and on down to lower sums. On October 4, 1920, the number of employees had been reduced to 4,459 on the regular rolls.

The present Public Printer abolished the following positions:

POSITIONS ABOLISHED IN THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE, APRIL 5 TO OCTOBER 2, 1921

Superintendent of work, $3,600; assistant foreman, job section, $2,300; two desk men, hand section, $4,000; chief laborer, linotype section, $1,252; electrotype molder in charge, foundry section, $2,128; desk man, $1,252; desk man, $1,878; laborer, $776.40; pressman in charge, $2,003.20; clerk in pressroom, $1,252; assistant storekeeper, $2,000; computer, $2,200; helper, $1,126.80; eight clerks, $8,640; bookbinder in charge, $2,003.20; directress, $1,252; six bookbinders in charge, $12,019.20; counter, $1,126.80; stereotyper, $2,003.20.

4,444 EMPLOYEES STILL ON ROLL

But, Mr. Speaker, even though I feel somewhat encouraged by the reduction effected by the Public Printer, I can not forget the fact that three years after the armistice, on the 3d day of October, 1921, we still had 4,444 employees on the pay roll of the Government Printing Office. In just recognition to the merit of the present Public Printer over his predecessor, however, I must say, Mr. Speaker, that on October 1, 1921, he had 44,662 folios of copy on hand to print, as compared with 22,244 folios on hand October 1, 1920. And in addition to this, he had 2,920 galleys in the proof room on October 1, 1921, as compared with only 948 galleys in the proof room on October 1, 1920. This proves conclusively that there has been a large surplus of employees.

STOPPED GAMBLING IN GOVERNMENT BUILDING

When Mr. Carter took charge gambling of every kind was carried on in the Government Printing Office. Some participated in stock gambling. Others played the racing boards. And still others "shuffled the deck and threw the bones." Mr. Carter stopped it, though to do it he first had to suspend and dismiss certain employees. I congratulate him.

But on a most important improvement promised by him Mr. Carter has utterly failed. He tried, but was too weak. His intentions were good, but he is not properly supported by Members of Congress; and they have not supported him because many do not know anything about existing conditions there. For instance, on September 19, 1921, Mr. Charles S. Lewis, a prominent business man of St. Louis, Mo., wrote to our distinguished colleague, Congressman NEWTON of Missouri, protesting against "closed-shop" conditions in our Government Printing Office, and deprecating the report that certain employees were paying as much as $25 each month out of their salary on assessments made by the Typographical Union for its 44-hours-per-week strike expenses and their regular union dues.

In his reply from St. Louis, dated September 25, 1921, Congressman NEWTON stated:

"Those employees in the Government departments who desire to become members of any organization, which they think will better their condition, are permitted to do so. A very large per cent of them, however, prefer not to join such organizations, and their failure to do so does not in any way militate against their employment. The matter of membership in any organization is purely with the individual. But to my mind a statement to the effect that these employees each are paying $25 a month out of their niggardly salaries, which they receive, is utterly absurd."

And recently, the president of the Standard Printing Co., of Louisville, Ky., wrote to our distinguished colleague, Congressman BARKLEY, protesting against such closed-shop conditions, to which our colleague replied:

"The STANDARD PRINTING CO.,

"Louisville, Ky.

"GENTLEMEN: I have your letter of October 5 indorsing certain alleged 'efforts' being made by the Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, to release the 'death grip' which you say the printers' union has had on the United States Printing Office for these many years.

"In the first place, there is no such death grip upon the Government Printing Office, and never has been. Men who are employed in that institution undergo a civil-service examination to test their fitness for the positions which they seek, and the question whether they belong to a union is not inquired into. They may belong or not, as they choose, and there is no discrimination in the Government Printing Office one way or another on that account.

"I might add that I am not in sympathy with the chronic tirades of Mr. BLANTON against labor unions, and I decline to be led by him upon that subject.

"Sincerely yours,

"ALBEN W. BARKLEY."

And in reply to our colleague, this Louisville business man wrote the following:

"Hon. A. W. BARKLEY,

"Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 8th and regret to note your lack of first-hand information relative to the conditions that exist in the Government Printing Office in Washington.

"I have in my employ a gentleman who has within the past 30 days left the employ of the Government Printing Office in Washington, and he advises me that in his 12 years' experience in the Government Printing Office he knows absolutely that the typographical union has dominated the office to such an extent that any other employee of the Government Printing Office that was not a member of the typographical union was unable to secure anything like justice or fair dealing in the matter of advancement, and that by the silent treatment, ostracism, and other like measures the life of any employee who was not a member of the typographical union was made most miserable, indeed.

"Your statement that there is no discrimination in the Government Printing Office one way or another is therefore not borne out by facts.

"The writer knows nothing whatever about the tirades of Mr. BLANTON against the labor unions, but he does know that the time has come when the employers of this country, especially in the manufacturing lines, must refuse to be further dominated by unionism. The writer, as well as all employers claiming to be decent and honest, will ever stand on the side of and for labor, for we do not claim to be other than of that class; but we do stand and will fight against the further domination of the best interests of this country by unionism.

"With kindest personal regards and best wishes, I beg to remain,

"Yours very truly,

"STANDARD PRINTING CO."

The writer of the above two letters signed "Stondard Printing Co." is Hon. David B. G. Rose, president of said company, who was grand master of the Masonic Lodge for the State of Kentucky.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the above are merely samples of a number of such letters I have received, indicating that my colleagues are not familiar with just how strong a hold our employees' unions have upon the throat of this Government. Therefore I am going to this trouble to inform them.

Do they all get "niggardly salaries," as the gentleman from Missouri believes? Not at all. They all get Sunday off, or one day each week in lieu of Sunday. They get all of the lawful holidays. They get all of the special holidays so numerously occurring in Washington. They get half of Saturday throughout the summer months. And they are all given 30 days' vacation each year on full pay. The night shifts receive 20 per cent extra pay. They are neither pushed nor rushed in their work. They work in a most comfortable, modern building, under pleasant surroundings, with steam heat, electric lights, electric fans, ice water, comfortable furniture, and modern machinery, apparatus, and appliances. And here are the niggardly monthly salaries some of them get:

Wages paid for the month of July, 1921, by the United States to certain employees in the Government Printing Office, amount received by each employee: George H. Carter, $500; John Greene, $300; Marion E. Bullock, $300; E. E. Emerson, $300; Walter R. Metz, $300; A. P. Tisdel, $291.66; William A. Smith, $250; Elwood S. Moorehead, $250; James K. Wallace, $250; Martin S. Speelman, $250; William H. Cornish, $250; Bert E. Bair, $250; Edward M. Nevils, $250; James H. Heslet, $250; Henry H. Wright, $229.16; Edwin F. Geyer, $228.33; Arthur J. Symonds, $228.33; William J. Manning, $228.33; Harry A. Brandt, $209; Miss Mary A. Tate, $228.33; Robert W. Summers, $228.33; Benjamin W. Butler, $228.33; Edward J. Wilver, $228.33; Russell O. Dahl, $228.33; George T. Lecompte, $220.32; Charles F. Markley, $220.32; Michael M. Sweetman, $220.32; Samuel M. Edmunds, $220.32; Emerson B. Swayne, $220.32; Stephen T. Brown, $220.32; Charles C. Cawson, $220.32; Frank A. Dougherty, $220.32; John T. Dunlap, $220.32; Arthur J. McMillan, $220.32; Joseph H. Benner, $220.32; George W. Godwin, $220.32; Oscar J. Homer, $220.32; John T. Jarvis, $220.32; John Linquist, $220.32; Howard R. Loeffel, $220.32; Howard V. Mills, $220.32; Peter W. Pritchett, $220.32; William H. Shreve, $220.32; Finley S. Hayes, $220.32; Albert McMillan, $229.32; Frank L. White, $220.32; Alpheus E. Riddle, $220.32; William A. Mitchell, $211.66; John F. Fitzpatrick, $211.66; Richard C. Lohmeyer, sr., $211.66; John A. Patterson, $211.66; Charles Meier, $211.66; John J. O'Brien, $211.66; George Gerberich, $211.66; William H. Chase, $211.66; William T. Herritage, $211.66; J. H. Phillips, $211.66; John O'Donoghue, $211.66; W. F. Crump, $211.66; B. M. Connolly, $211.66; T. P. Rooney, $211.66; W. D. Skeen, $211.66; E. A. Kerr, $211.66; Louis Naylor, $207.80; J. B. Newlon, $207.80; Daniel O'Connell, $207.80; F. W. Parker, $207.80.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the above are among the highest-paid employees, the above list being absolutely correct, approved by the Public Printer. But they are not getting niggardly salaries.

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that during the month of May I had up with the Public Printer the question of whether it was necessary for one of his employees to join the typographical union in order to hold his job. And I succeeded in getting the Public Printer to then assert that President Roosevelt's decision in the Miller case should be his guide. Miller was kicked out of the Printing Office because he refused to join the union. President Roosevelt reinstated him, and held:

"That no union rules or regulations can be permitted to override the laws of the United States, which it is my sworn duty to enforce. These laws are enacted for the benefit of the whole people, and can not and must not be construed as permitting discrimination against some of the people. I am President of all the people of the United States without regard to creed, color, birthplace, occupation, or social condition. My aim is to do equal and exact justice as among them all. In the employment and dismissal of men in the Government service I can no more recognize the fact that a man does or does not belong to a union as being for or against him than I can recognize the fact that he is a Protestant or a Catholic, a Jew or a Gentile, as being for or against him."

And based upon such decision of President Roosevelt in the Miller case, which he quoted, the Public Printer announced his policy as follows:

"If by the term 'open shop' you mean a place where a person may be employed regardless of whether he belongs to a labor organization, then I presume the Government Printing Office may be called an 'open shop' under the system of appointments through the civil service, as I have above stated.

"It is but fair to advise you, however, that I have been informed that most of the employees in the skilled trades of the Government Printing Office do belong to their respective labor organizations. Such membership, I assume, is a matter entirely in their own discretion. I take it that they have the same right to become affiliated in trade organizations as we have to join the various religious and fraternal organizations that may seem beneficial to us."

With such a declaration as the above, Mr. Speaker, coming from the Public Printer direct, one would naturally presume that employees of the Government Printing Office were not forced to join the union in order to retain their positions after being placed there by the United States civil service. Yet I received the following from a Government employee:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1921.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

Representative from Texas, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am an employee of the Government Printing Office, being a compositor on the seventh floor. I have held such position continuously for about two years. I receive 75 cents per hour, plus the $240 a year bonus.

Against my will I was forced to join the union, as I was given to understand by employees that I could not hold my job long in the Government Printing Office without it. In addition to the 2 per cent assessment that comes out of our salary each month, one-half of which goes as dues to our local, we have been assessed an additional 10 per cent to pay the expenses of the strikes that have been going on over the United States in behalf of the 44-hour week, for which our union is contending.

I deemed the oath to my union, which I was compelled to take when I joined, contrary to the pledges I made in my oath to my Government which I took at the time I entered the service.

Mr. Flanigan, who is chapel secretary for our union, likewise works for the Government, and makes a practice of going among the men during business hours and collecting dues. When the first payment of assessments in June was due, I refused to pay same, as I felt that same was an imposition. On last Friday, during business hours, Mr. Flanigan, the chapel chairman, advised me that unless I paid my assessments to the union I could not work in the Government Printing Office any longer. While a number of employees do not carry cards in the union any longer, the union makes it so unpleasant that work there is practically unbearable. I appeal to Congress to see that we are not further molested.

Very truly, yours,

MILLARD FRENCH.

I immediately wrote to the Public Printer about the matter and sent him Mr. Millard French's letter, and after writing the second time on July 22, 1921, I finally received Mr. Carter's reply, as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, July 23, 1921.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I am pleased to acknowledge receipt of your letters of July 15, 20, and 22, relative to the reports you have received concerning activities of labor organizations in this office, especially as to the case of Millard French.

Upon receipt of your letter of the 20th, I at once called for Mr. French and had what appeared to be a satisfactory talk with him. I understood then that he was going to advise you as to my position in the matter, which seemed to meet with his approval.

I have also talked with Mr. Flanagan, in regard to whom Mr. French made his complaint, and several other employees of the shop who I thought might have some knowledge of the alleged activities of the organizations to which you referred. I called their attention to the letter which I addressed to you under date of May 25, 1921, and in the statement of President Roosevelt which I quoted therein. I informed these employees that I am in full accord with the views of President Roosevelt on this subject. Mr. Flanagan denied to me that he had told Mr. French that the latter "could not work in the Government Printing Office any longer" if he did not pay his union dues. I advised him and the other employees with whom I talked that I will not permit any intimidation of the employees in this office, and that the working time of the shop can not be used for other than the business of the Government. I received assurances that my directions would be complied with and that there will be no ground for further complaint.

Thanking you for calling the matter to my attention, I beg to remain.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer.

But about that time, Mr. Speaker, I also received a letter from another employee in the Government Printing Office asking me not to make his name public, from which letter I copy the following excerpt:

"1. A printer goes into the shop ignorant that it is closed to nonunion men. Immediately after he is assigned work he is approached by the 'walking delegate' (using Government time) and asked for his 'card.' If he hasn't one, he is told that this is a union shop; that everyone in the shop carries a card.

"2. If he delays taking out a card, which costs all the way from $5 up to $25, pressure in every conceivable manner is brought to bear till life is made unbearable, and if sensible of injustice a condition is made to render honest work impossible. He is told by 'voluntary confidentials' that he will not likely cross over the dead line of probational service (six months), and that he need not expect promotion without a card.

"3. It is a safe estimate that seven-eighths of the force now in the Government Printing Office have been forced to join the union, one by one, as they come in the shop.

"4. The 'walking delegate' collects dues during work hours from a list made up from the Government time slip, and if working in pairs his partner is idle during this time.

"5. The 'walking delegate' calls time to commence and quit work.

"6. This appointed agent of the union can and does assess fines for any infraction of the union rules.

"7. Girl helpers and laborers are told by the 'walking delegate' that they will be taken care of in preference to nonmembers.

"8. It is an open secret that the 'walking delegate' in some divisions has more to say in the conduct and control than the authorized foreman.

"9. The regular union dues are 2 per cent of all earnings; old-age pension, 2½ per cent of all earnings; and for the 'strike assessment,' 10 per cent of all earnings—total, 14 per cent of every dollar earned by a printer. Every printer pays the union each month approximately $25.

"10. If the 44-hour 'strike' is won, no Government employee can benefit by it, even if he favored it.

"11. Bulletin boards in every division are plastered with union bulletins that would tend to intimidate and hold in line weak members.

"12. In arguments over the 'strike' more than one printer has been heard to say: 'I hold my allegiance to the union above that of the Government.'

"13. The secretary of the Washington City union is sick. 'Spadge' Parsons, foreman of the monotype section (day), Government Printing Office, is acting in his stead. If a printer refuses to 'take out a card,' this man (Parsons) is in the dual capacity of 'secretary of the union' that says 'keep him out' and that of a sworn Government official passing on his qualifications at the end of six months' probational service.

"14. The obligation required to enter the Government service and that required by the union are at entire variance; hence the closed condition of the Government print shop forces every employee to indirectly perjure himself."

And concerning the threats made to kick Millard French out if he did not pay up his union dues and assessments, I put Mr. Carter on notice concerning their methods, as follows:

"Hon. GEORGE H. CARTER,
"The Public Printer, Government Printing Office,
"Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR MR. CARTER: Supplementing the letters I wrote you on the 15th and 20th instants, to neither of which I have yet received a reply, this is to state that I learn the way the unions in the Government Printing Office have of getting rid of a man who will not join them is to attack his efficiency record, when it should not be subject to attack. In view of the fact that Mr. Millard French's record was first class up to the time I wrote you on July 15, this is to request that should any such tactics be employed against him that you give the matter careful consideration and investigation before taking action.

"Very sincerely, yours,

"THOMAS L. BLANTON."

Within a few days I received the following from Mr. John W. Powers, another employee of the Government Printing Office, answering specific questions propounded by me, to wit:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31, 1921.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In response to the various questions you have propounded to me, I feel that I have no right to refuse to answer same, hence give you the data requested.

I am 48 years of age, and have been in the print shop practically all my life. I have been editor of country newspapers, and the attached copies of letters herewith will evidence my standing with men who know me.

Ever since I was required to take the typographical union oath, which, among other things, provides:

"that my fidelity to the union and my duty to the members thereof shall in no sense be interferred with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise"—

I have felt that it conflicts with my oath to the Government, which I took when entering public employment.

After we were assessed an extra 10 per cent of our salaries by our union, to pay the expenses of the union's 44-hour-week campaign, and its strikes all over the country, I felt that I was unable financially to stand this drain, and on July 1, 1921, I gave up my union card, and refused to pay the 10 per cent assessment. I then went on a vacation of two weeks' leave.

All proof readers work in pairs. Mr. A. A. Meridith works with me, and we are called partners. Since I have been back from my vacation, both the foreman, Mr. William H. Cornish, and the night superintendent, Mr. Bullock, have refused to speak to me. The acting desk foreman, Mr. Harry B. Goodrell, has refused to speak to me. I have been subjected to what they call "the silent treatment," which no man of any self-respect can long stand.

Giving you the specific instances requested, will state that on July 22, 1921, during work hours in the Government Printing Office, the following colloquy took place between Mr. John Hooper, the copy editor, who is a strong union man, and my partner, Mr. Meridith, concerning myself:

"JOHN HOOPER. I see they have your partner on the slab.

"A. A. MERIDITH. Yes.

"JOHN HOOPER. I hope they get him."

On the preceding day, July 21, 1921, I had been called down by the foreman for a mistake, which Mr. Meridith admitted was not mine but his.

Yes; it is a fact, that on July 25, 1921, I was made to move my desk to right under the supervision of the foreman, which is the first time I have been forced to move positions during my service. I am the only proof reader on that floor who does not belong to the union.

Yes; it is a fact that on July 26, 1921, both Mr. Bullock and Mr. Goodrell refused to speak to me. Mr. Goodrell accused me of delaying rush proof, which I had not done. Later, he remarked to my partner, Mr. Meredith: "That fellow (meaning me) has been slamming things down on the desk."

Yes; it is a fact that on July 26, 1921, the following colloquy occurred between Mr. Charles N. Travis, a strong union man, and my partner, Meridith:

"CHARLES N. TRAVIS. Did your partner fix up his card?

"A. A. MERIDITH. He didn't pay his last assessment.

"CHARLES N. TRAVIS. You will get in bad if you stay with him.

"A. A. MERIDITH. Well, I don't feel disposed to ask the foreman to make a change; he knows as much about the situation as I do."

Yes; it is a fact that on July 26, 1921, Mr. Smith, of the monotype section, indicated that he would like to give up his union card, but stated, "I simply couldn't stand the gaff if I gave up my card."

With regard to what occurred in the Courtney cigar store on July 26, 1921, the following colloquy took place between Mr. Robert L. Townsend, a proof reader and strong union man, and my partner, Meridith:

"ROBERT L. TOWNSEND. What is that fellow Powers doing? Is he going to pay up?

"A. A. MERIDITH. I am not in his confidence.

"ROBERT L. TOWNSEND. They will get after him if he don't."

Yes; I have heard that it is a fact that on July 27, 1921, the four nonunion printers in the monotype section were moved into one alley close under the foreman's supervision.

With regard to additional slights, Mr. Charles F. Cooke, a proof reader, who until I dropped my card was my friend and had accepted medicine from me, now refuses to speak to me.

With only one exception, the union men in the Government Printing Office from my own State pass me up cold without speaking. No man with self-respect can long withstand their snubs and insults. Present conditions are simply unbearable to any man who refuses to affiliate with the union. I am not a tatler, and give you these facts only because you have asked for same. Mr. Carter, the present Public Printer, is a splendid gentleman, and I feel sure would remedy these conditions if he fully understood them.

Very truly yours,

JOHN W. POWERS.

The following, Mr. Speaker, will show who Mr. John W. Powers is, and that he stands well with the present Republican organization:

Mr. JOHN W. POWERS,
326 Indiana Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR POWERS: Here is a letter that Senator McCormick sent to me some time ago which you better have. You can show it to him if you ask him for a letter to the new Public Printer. I am also handing you my letter to Mr. Carter, which I hope won't do you any harm.

Very truly yours,

FRED W. UPHAM.

[United States Senate. Committee for Consideration of a National Budget. Medill McCormick, Illinois, chairman]

CHICAGO, ILL., March 2, 1921.

Hon. FRED W. UPHAM,
111 West Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR FRED: Just a line to acknowledge your letter of January 25 in behalf of Mr. Powers, and to say that I am taking the papers back to Washington with me and will do all that I can.

Sincerely, yours,

MEDILL MCCORMICK.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 1, 1921.

Mr. GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CARTER: I am particularly interested in Mr. John W. Powers, who is now connected with the Government Printing Office.

He aspires to the position of assistant superintendent of work (night), and it will please me very much if he gets the position.

Senator McCormick, of Illinois, I know will be glad to join in this recommendation.

Very truly yours,

FRED W. UPHAM, Treasurer.

And also in July, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from a young man employed as a helper in the Government Printing Office, wherein he says:

"The unions here have kept all apprentices out of the Government Printing Office for years, all mechanics being appointed from the outside as journeymen. Young men who start in as laborers and finally succeed in becoming helpers, although they learn and know the business, they can never become mechanics, as the union has it fixed that way.

"I will have to remain a helper the rest of my life, although I have learned the trade and in many instances do the same work as a mechanic.

"The unions frequently work mechanics in on 'helpers' jobs when they become vacant, so that as mechanics they then receive double what the helpers draw.

"I wish you every success, and must say you are doing wonderful work in Congress, and hope you will be able to force the union to permit apprentices to work in the largest printing plant in the world, so that a young man will have a chance of becoming a journeyman mechanic.

UNIONS FORCED FRENCH AND POWERS TO RESIGN

Within a few days after the Public Printer wrote me that—"I will not permit any intimidation of the employees in this office, and the working time of the shop can not be used for other than business of the Government"— the union forced both Millard French and John W. Powers to resign. I immediately went to the Public Printer and called his attention to the threats I had heard his employees had made, to wit, "that if the Public Printer fooled with them, they would take his job away and supplant him with another, as they had more influence on the Hill [Capitol] than he did."

And I asked Mr. Carter if he was going to let such threats influence him. And he said he was not, and that he was not going to accept the resignations of French and Powers, but was going to have them work on and protect them. I called his attention to the fact that on Monday, May 23, 1921, upon request, Mr. Edgar Wallace, representative of the American Federation of Labor, produced at a hearing before the District Committee on the antipicketing bill a copy of the constitution of the International Typographical Union, same being the personal copy belonging to Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, with his name printed on the back, and which, on page 15 thereof, under the heading "Obligation for members," appeared the oath taken by all members of said typographical union, to wit:

"Every person admitted as a member of this union shall subscribe to the following obligation, which shall apply only to matters pertaining to the printing industry:

"'I (give name) hereby solemnly and sincerely swear (or affirm) that I will not reveal any business or proceedings of any meeting of this or any subordinate union to which I may hereafter be attached, unless by order of the union, except to those whom I know to be members in good standing thereof; that I will, without equivocation or evasion and to the best of my ability, abide by the constitution, by-laws, and the adopted scale of prices of any union to which I may belong; that I will at all times support the laws, regulations, and decisions of the International Typographical Union, and will carefully avoid giving aid or succor to its enemies, and use all honorable means within my power to procure employment for members of the International Typographical Union in preference to others; that my fidelity to the union and my duty to the members thereof shall in no sense be interfered with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise; that I will belong to no society or combination composed wholly or partly of printers, with the intent or purpose to interfere with the trade regulations or influence or control the legislation of this union; that I will not wrong a member, or see him or her wronged, if in my power to prevent. To all of which I pledge my most sacred honor.'"

You will note in said oath that each member swears:

"That my fidelity to the union and my duty to the members thereof shall in no sense be interfered with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise."

And I told him that the above oath and evidence was in the hearings on the antipicketing bill, on file in his office, and that that oath was the one every one of his employees had taken and was the one both Millard French and John W. Powers considered was in direct conflict with their oath to the Government. I warned him that the union men would find some way of getting rid of French and to be on the lookout.

UNION'S MINIMUM SCALE FOR 44-HOUR WEEK

On July 30, 1921, M. A. Bodenhamer, president of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, here in Washington, D. C., issued the following minimum scale per week, for 44 hours' work, to remain in effect until April 30, 1922:

Hand men, day work, per week of 44 hours	$40.00
Hand men, night work, per week of 44 hours	45.00
Machine men, day work, per week of 44 hours	42.00
Machine men, night work, per week of 44 hours	47.25

On August 15, 1921, I received the following from Mr. Powers:

AUGUST 15, 1921.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: If what Mr. Carter means by his statement, "No union dues will be collected in the shop during work hours," is that none will be paid during the time that we are actually reading proof, has been partially accomplished—not wholly by any means.

Last Thursday night (pay day) when the bell rang for lunch, at 11 o'clock, the union collector with his money box and receipt book moved up and took charge of the copy desk, and to all intents and purposes did a regular clearing-house business—took in money and issued license to the printers, that gives them the privilege of reading proof another two weeks without being ostracized and referred to as "rats." During this 30-minute lunch time the Riggs Bank never did a more flourishing business over and above board.

I watched this functioning of a business organization inside a Government department with deadened amazement, and really wondered if Mr. Carter called that "dues stopped collected during work hours."

Sincerely,

JOHN W. POWERS.

A few days thereafter, in company with my colleagues, Congressman Webster, of Washington, and Congressman UNDERHILL, of Massachusetts, we thrashed over the situation with the Public Printer, and were assured by him that both French and Powers would be given a square deal.

BUT THIS IS WHAT HAPPENED TO FRENCH

Here appeared deleted by dashes a statement duly sworn to by Millard French, filed in the Government Printing Office, detailing the inhuman treatment accorded him by a union foreman, Levi Huber, aided and abetted by two other union employees, James Leek and Burney Parker, forcing French to quit work, which because of objectionable language is now omitted.

It was dated "Mount Rainier, Md., September 3, 1921," addressed to "Mr. George H. Carter, Public Printer, Government Printing Office," and duly sworn to by said French on September 5, 1921, before David Laing, notary public, with seal. It showed that on September 2, 1921, when French reported this attack on him, the Public Printer required him to file this detailed sworn statement. It showed that without any provocation whatever French was shamefully cursed and abused, said Huber calling him a black-hearted scab, a fool, a coward, a dirty cur, and numerous profane and dirty names, which Huber also applied to the "Public Printer and Congressman BLANTON" for interfering with their union methods; said Huber asserting that he could not be hurt by French reporting him, as he was not afraid of the Public Printer, insinuating that he and his union were well intrenched at the Capitol and would be protected by Members of Congress. In printing the objectionable language it was abbreviated by use of initial letters and dashes, such as is done when printing same in judicial decisions in court reports. To which sworn statement the Public Printer replied with the succeeding letter, which resumes said printed report here copied from the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 22, 1921, to wit:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
September 9, 1921.

Mr. MILLARD FRENCH,
Mount Rainier, Md.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of September 3, in which you file certain charges against a fellow workman in the section in which you are employed.

A hearing was held, and Mr. Huber, the employee against whom the charges were made, was suspended and requested to answer the same in writing.

After thoroughly investigating the case I can not regard you as entirely guiltless in the affair. Your oral and written charges, I am inclined to believe, contain several misstatements which I can not overlook, especially your statements as to reporting the occurrence to the foreman of the section. Therefore, in the interest of peace and harmony in the office, I have directed your transfer to another section.

You are cautioned not to engage in similar altercations hereafter, and if employees manifest improper conduct toward you, you are to immediately report the same to your superior officer.

Respectfully,

GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer.

MOUNT RAINIER, MD., September 10, 1921.

Mr. GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, stating that you find it necessary to transfer me to another division of the office.

I consider this action on your part virtually a repudiation of my sworn statement and a humiliation to me, as the members of the union will herald it as a victory—first blood.

As the union at present dominates the office (and I see no hope of it being remedied now), it is an impossibility for me to longer stand up under the humiliation and do honest work.

I consider it impossible to work in the shop in peace without a union card, therefore consider this my resignation.

Personally, I beg to remain your friend.

Very truly yours,

MILLARD FRENCH.

MOUNT RAINIER, MD., September 17, 1921.

Mr. GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 16th instant.

I note that you say:

"You are hereby notified that you will be given until Monday to report for duty; otherwise your name will be dropped from our rolls on that date."

Mr. Carter, you are reminded that on the 10th of this month I sent you my resignation, of which you have acknowledged receipt.

However much I dislike to be driven out of the office, I am forced to accept the inevitable—leave the office.

Reiterating my resignation: "It is impossible to work in peace in the Government Printing Office without carrying a union card."

Respectfully,

MILLARD FRENCH.

And so, Mr. Speaker, out into the gutter these union employees in the Government Printing Office kicked Millard French, a poor man with a wife and five children to support, because he would not pay dues.

AND WHAT IS HAPPENING TO JOHN W. POWERS

On September 29, 1921, I received the following letter from Mr. Powers:

"DEAR MR. BLANTON: I am sending you a copy of the Trades Unionist. This page was nailed upon the proof-room bulletin board the day after publication and remained there till we commenced work last Tuesday night. I might as well post up argument against the Democratic Party or reflections against some church, it occurs to me, with the same propriety. The man who wrote it is an employee of the office; he and the man that put it upon the bulletin board (if they are not one and the same party) should be disciplined, and the foremen who let it hang there are none the less guilty.

"I am reliably informed that Tuesday a petition was being circulated and signed in the hand section protesting against this 10 per cent assessment, and that the foreman, Hugh Reid, stopped it with the remark: 'You are giving aid and comfort to the enemy.' I thought it was the limit for officials of the union to interfere in such matters inside the office, but for designated officials of the bureau to brazenly step up and give orders, when the printers are making an effort within their own ranks to throw off this union yoke, points suspiciously to who is 'in the saddle.'

"Sincerely,

JOHN W. POWERS."

You will note that the foreman, Hugh Reid, mentioned, is drawing $228.33 per month from the Government, and that he is also listed in the Federal Employee, the official magazine of the National Federation of Federal Employees, as the associate editor thereof, and I am informed that he spends much time in the congressional press galleries as a reporter, though of this I have no personal knowledge. The portion of the Trades Unionist which Mr. Powers says was posted on the bulletin board of the Government Printing Office and remained there for about a week is the front page, containing a large cartoon drawn by J. M. Baer, of a laborer with great balls and chains attached to his feet, entitled "Industrial slavery," with the following printed article attacking Powers:

"[From the Trades Unionist, official organ, Central Labor Union, Washington, D. C., September 16, 1921]

"MANUFACTURERS RECORD MAKES ATTACK ON I. T. U.—SAYS CONDITIONS IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE ARE HORRIBLE AND QUOTES INGRATE

By Fred S. Walker

"In the issue of September 8 the Manufacturers Record prints another installment of its serial attack upon the typographical union with a recitation of the horrible conditions in the Government Printing Office. The Record has been carrying on the attack commenced by Congressman BLANTON and reproduces letters from an employee of the shop who claims that Uncle Sam's printery is a closed shop entirely dominated by union officials. This tirade has appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and in newspapers over the country as propaganda in the open-shop crusade, and it would appear that a review of the battle is in order. Statements have been made uncontradicted which are far from truth.

"In the first place, the attack commenced when a member of the union who had been the recipient of every form of assistance imaginable from his fellow workers declined to continue payment of dues and wrote Mr. BLANTON, of Texas. This man did not drop out of the union on account of inability to find the money, but because, as he expressed it, 'I am tired of being bled.' He unblushingly insinuated that he had never sympathized with union principles, and that he saw a good chance to wreck the organization. He probably also saw himself a hero and the idol of the Typothetae and the Manufacturers' Record. But after he had made the break he looked in vain for his followers; and this after accepting meat, fuel, and clothes from his friends in the organization.

"The Manufacturers' Record reproduces letters from an employee of the night proof room, who states, 'I make the simple statement that no self-respecting citizen can work in the Government Printing Office without first getting a license from the International Typographical Union.'

"That this anonymous complainant is a self-respecting citizen is evidenced by the fact that he was willing to forget his antiunion convictions and carry a card. His own words classify him when he admits that he had not the courage to stand up for his principles, but joined the union merely to avoid 'ostracism.'

"It is not difficult to guess the author of these letters, and as he is not a member of the union and as his letters appear without signature, he may be excluded from the class of 'self-respecting citizens.' He also intimates very clearly that the Public Printer is misleading Congress as to the true condition of affairs, which may call for an explanation, if Mr. Carter hears of it.

"It should also be here stated that it is not now nor has it ever been necessary for a man to own a union card to work in the Government Printing Office. Of course, by remaining outside the organization of his fellow workers he necessarily alienates their interest in his welfare, but if his ideas are founded on truth he should be able to stand upon them.

"The Record also attacks the oath of the printers, stating that it places the union above the Constitution of the United States. The publishers of the Record know full well that better men than they have subscribed to that same oath without censure. We mention President Harding, Horace Greeley, George W. Childs, Congressman Albert Johnson, of Washington, and many other men who are and have been leaders in the progress of American democracy. It ill becomes a mouthpiece of organized capital to attempt to belittle a trade-union which has for more than a hundred years been tried and not found wanting.

"These would-be 'free and independent workers' further allege they are ostracized because of their nonparticipation in their coworkers' efforts to advance the cause of the workingmen. And why not? No man who takes all and gives nothing will ever be popular with honest denizens of this world.

"They may fit in somewhere, but you must swear when you mention it."

And, Mr. Speaker, I hear that union members have made life so unbearable to Mr. Powers that they have forced him to send in his resignation again.

$739,107 RECEIPTS FROM 10 PER CENT STRIKE ASSESSMENT IN ONE MONTH, $915,673.53 IN ANOTHER

On page 141 of the August issue, 1921, of the Typographical Journal is the following letter from the president of the union, from which I quote:

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

JULY 25, 1921.

To the Members of the International Typographical Union.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: The struggle for the 44-hour week continues with unabated intensity, but little change taking place since the last month, and with but little likelihood of any change in the near future from present indications. The antagonistic employers have apparently settled down to an indefinite period of hostilities, urged on by forces they are powerless to resist. Having but little success in manning their offices with competent help, their efforts are centered mainly on attempts to destroy the morale of our members. The number of towns affected is 220 and the number of members on strike 8,607.

We now have 347 unions signed up. An examination of the financial statement shows that for the month, May 21 to June 20, inclusive, receipts from the 10 per cent assessment were $739,107, while defense expenses and benefits amounted to $689,765.79, leaving a balance in that fund of $49,341.21. For the month of June 21 to July 20, inclusive, receipts were $915,673.53, and expenditures $844,271.12, leaving a balance for the month of $71,405.41.

And from page 181 of said Typographical Journal, here is what it reports on conditions in the Nation's Capital:

"WASHINGTON, D. C.

"The July meeting of Columbia Union was well attended in spite of the more or less well-known impression that the National Capital is a torrid summer resort. And, everything considered, it was a rather warm meeting. The business committee spanked the foremen on the two morning papers for violating union rules, and the recommendations were adopted vigorously. Propositions relating to the assessment received scant consideration, and after a half hour of fiery oratory the meeting uproariously adopted the following resolution, which was fathered by Jacob Wagner, of the National Capital Press, though there is a strong suspicion that it was mothered by our new assistant secretary. The resolution concludes:

"'Resolved, That we declare anew our determination to continue to pay in full the 10 per cent assessment, and all other assessments that may be necessary, until victory is complete.'

"Columbia Union is in this antiunion fight to the finish, and the reports in the papers that a few pressmen and binders have returned to work will not weaken our determination to win. Those weak-kneed cider pressmen and highbinders can do very little work until there are some printers on the job to set type. And when the printers return to work it will be under 44-hour agreements.

"Our relief committee is just now badly in need of relief. The chairman, Joseph H. Cummings, we are told, is listening to the wild waves in Atlantic City. Miss Ella M. Wallace is also on leave.

"Government Printing Office foremanships are still on the move. Sheridan C. Koons, of the proof section, is now in charge of the branch in the Congressional Library. Allen C. Clough (pronounced like 'tuff') now enjoys the privilege of putting his feet on the desk in the job room. Stanley A. Ridings is back on his old job as chief of the monotype section. Hugh L. Reid, former chairman, is the new director of destinies in the day hand section, assisted by Maj. Will H. Chase, with Edward Coleman in charge of the night force. John R. Berg, one of the old-time bosses, came back as captain of the day linotype section, and William D. Skeen, an operator, is first mate. William H. Cornish, for several years chairman of the day proof section, is in charge of the night proof room, assisted by James E. Maynard. Edward M. Nevils is king of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD force. Marion E. Bullock is in charge of the office at night.

"This is one of the fancy jobs and deserves a paragraph by itself: Ellwood S. Moorhead, operator on the night CONGRESSIONAL RECORD force, to Foreman of Printing."

You will note that it boasts of the fact that Mr. Hugh Reid, drawing $228.33 per month as a Government employee, is a foreman in the Printing Office. Now, as associate editor of the Federal Employee, note what Mr. Hugh Reid permits on page 8 of the October 8, 1921, issue to be said about Secretary Denby:

Here is omitted a short attack upon a former Secretary of the Navy, the language of which might be objectionable.

Now, in this connection, Mr. Speaker, let me remind my colleagues and the country of what Hon. Herbert D. Brown, Chief of the United States Bureau of Efficiency, said against Government employees belonging to unions:

UNITED STATES BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I have just received your letter of March 2, in which you make certain inquiries concerning personnel conditions in the executive departments in Washington. I will quote your questions and undertake to answer them in the order in which they appear in your letter:

"(1) Both Congressman MADDEN and myself estimate that there are now in Washington 40,000 idle, unnecessary clerks still on the pay roll, whose services could be dispensed with without crippling the service. Is this true or not?"

I do not know whether your figures are correct or not, because I have not had the opportunity to find out. I know that there are a great many unnecessary clerks in Washington (literally thousands), but whether the number of them is 20,000, 40,000, or some other figure, I can not say. I know that there are very many superfluous clerks in Washington, because investigations made by the Bureau of Efficiency in certain offices have disclosed that fact.

"(2) May we expect efficient service generally from our employees as long as they are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?"

I believe that the affiliation of Government employees with labor organizations must, of necessity, result in a reduction of efficiency in the departments. I am of the opinion that such affiliation has an unfortunate effect on the morale of the service. The employee comes to feel that his success depends not so much on his individual effort as on the political strength of the organization to which he belongs.

"(3) Is there not fully as much reason for separating our Government employees from strike organizations as there was for separating the police and firemen from such organizations?"

Yes; quite as much reason, and even more. In the event of police strikes or strikes involving a fire department it will always be possible, because of the relatively small number of people involved, for residents of the community to assume the burdens laid down by the striking policemen or firemen, and while it is true that inexperienced persons would not be able to safeguard the public interests to the same extent as could regular policemen or firemen, yet the danger to the community could be kept within reasonable bounds and situations of this sort could be taken care of with a relatively small loss to the public. In the case of a strike of Government workers, which might involve not merely a few employees but practically the entire force in the Government service, the damage to the public interest would be far greater. Such a strike would practically result in the suspension of all the functions of the Federal Government. It would affect not merely a few people, or a few thousand people, but, practically speaking, the entire population of the country.

"(4) I call your attention to the attack made upon you in the Federal Employee, the official magazine of the National Federation of Federal Employees, for February 28, 1920, page 3 thereof, suggesting your demise, by reason of your late activities for efficiency. Is this veiled threat of the official organ of Government employees going to stop your activities and cause you to 'lay down'?"

My answer to this inquiry is "No." I shall continue to work for economy and efficiency in the Government service without regard to threats that may be made by any person or organization.

Very sincerely yours,

HERBERT D. BROWN,
Chief Bureau of Efficiency.

CLOSED SHOP IN ALL DEPARTMENTS

Now, Mr. Speaker, to show my colleagues and the country that this union closed-shop condition applies to all other departments of the Government as well as the Printing Office, let me quote the following evidence I submitted in June, 1919, before a joint hearing held by the House and Senate Committees on Labor:

STATEMENT OF MISS MARY CUNNINGHAM

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is Miss Mary Cunningham, whose home is in Plainview, Tex. She is not even a resident of my district.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name, please?

Mr. BLANTON. Her name is Miss Mary Cunningham.

Senator KENYON. And what is her business?

Mr. BLANTON. She is employed at the present time in the new War Risk Insurance Bureau under Mr. Jones.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Miss Cunningham, you are a niece of Judge J. F. Cunningham, who is a prominent lawyer, known all over Texas, are you not?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. To save time I am going to ask a few leading questions. Miss Cunningham, you have taught school for a number of years in Texas before coming to Washington, have you not?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. Yes, sir; three years.

Mr. BLANTON. Prior to your coming to Washington were you a member of a union?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. No, indeed.

Mr. BLANTON. Since you have been at work here in Washington, have you joined a union?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. Over at the War Risk; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. State to the committee why did you join the union.

Mr. MACCRATE. Let me ask a question. Were you ever employed in the Bureau of Employment Service of the United States Government?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. I have never been in any bureau but the War Risk Bureau, and I was appointed to that.

Mr. MACCRATE. I do not see how it is at all relevant; I do not see the relevancy of testimony of an employee of any other department of the Government when we are inquiring into this branch of the service and this branch of the service only.

Mr. BLANTON. Let her answer. State to the committee how came you to join the union and what made you join.

Mr. MACCRATE. I object to that, Mr. Chairman, on these grounds: If we are going to take up personal reasons and other reasons why girls join different associations, we will never finish here in this world. They may bring in girls from any one of the other departments and take up the time of this committee——

Mr. BLANTON. That is the only question that I desire to ask this witness; and I will say this: That she was induced to join one of them upon representations that that was the only way by which she could hold her position.

The CHAIRMAN. But you would not charge Secretary of Labor Wilson and Mr. Densmore——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). I want to show that that fact existed here in connection with some other matters which I desire to bring out and to charge Mr. Densmore with.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is not material.

Mr. BLANTON. I will connect it up directly with the Employment Service, and I will show that a person was discharged out of the Employment Service because she did not join a union.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, of course, there is a great variance of opinion about organized labor. Some gentlemen do not like it and some do like it, and——

Mr. HERSEY (interrupting). And Mr. Mooney is not on trial here.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say that I like it, where it is properly functioned, but where it is not it is absolutely wrong. I will try and connect this evidence up immediately with the Employment Service, but I will show that they not only discharged a woman over there because she was not a member of the union, but they followed up—followed that good woman up in various departments with the object of keeping her out of the Government employ. I will connect her testimony up with another——

Senator KENYON. You mean to say that this young lady had to join a union in order to hold a place in the War Risk Bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and another has been discharged because she did not join a union, and has been discharged from another place since. She was first discharged from the Employment Service.

Mr. WATSON. Well, don't you think that that should be shown by the one who was discharged from the Employment Service? Did they get Miss Cunningham her job?

Mr. BLANTON. They did not. I believe that I can show that it has been found to be absolutely necessary to join a union, almost, to hold a position in the city of Washington to-day.

Mr. WATSON. Suppose that be true; in what way is that going to throw any light on the conduct of the United States Employment Service?

Mr. BLANTON. But if the United States Employment Service itself discharged employees, and not only discharged employees but has followed her through to other departments, through their other employees, and prevented them from holding their jobs, it is not only important but it is an outrage.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, I press my objection.

Senator KENYON. I think Mr. BLANTON should produce the other witness and show it.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee would not like to hear her testimony? I will call the next witness.

STATEMENT OF MISS J. RAYNES LILESTONE

Mr. BLANTON. Your home address is Indianapolis, Ind., is it not, Miss Lilestone?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. In order that this good woman's standing may be known to the committee, I would like, with the permission of the committee, to place in the record a number of indorsements, one from Senator OVERMAN, who is chairman of the Committee on Rules of the United States Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. Until that is questioned, what is the use of putting a letter into the record. Nobody questions her at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do it for this reason: It has been brought to my attention——

The CHAIRMAN. She can tell who she is, and I do not think that anyone here will dispute her.

Mr. BLANTON. May I give my reasons? It has been brought to my attention that there has been an effort—that by reason of the fact that a certain auditor in the Shipping Board made a statement in the record a shore time ago—there has been an effort to prove that the man is insane—and witnesses are in this room now to attack the credibility of the witnesses that are brought in here.

Mr. MACCRATE. Until the witness's credibility is attacked I believe that the committee will assume that she is honest.

Mr. BLANTON. But I can not come back and refute the testimony that they will bring out. I have but a short time to appear before this committee—only two hours this morning. I do not expect to come before the committee any more, as I am very, very busy, and I can not be here to hear their testimony and introduce testimony to refute it.

But you have lived in Richmond, Va., for a number of years, and you have lived in Indianapolis, Ind., for a number of years?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And you were employed by the Labor Department, Miss Lilestone?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. When?

Miss LILESTONE. I began my services during the month of September.

Mr. BLANTON. When?

Miss LILESTONE. September 12.

Mr. BLANTON. And after entering your employment state whether or not you were requested to join a union.

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And what answer did you make to them?

Miss LILESTONE. I told them that I did not think it was necessary for me to join a union. The question was asked if I was a member of organized labor, and I told them no.

Mr. CASEY. What is that?

Miss LILESTONE. I told them no, that I did not think it was necessary in order to keep my Government position.

Mr. BLANTON. And what other statements, if any, was made to you?

Miss LILESTONE. The statement was made that in order to have a safe position that I would be compelled to join the union.

Mr. BLANTON. It was in the Labor Department?

Miss LILESTONE. It was in the Labor Department; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And you refused to join the union?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. Were you working for the Employment Service system of the branch of the Department of Labor?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NOLAN. And who was your superior officer?

Miss LILESTONE. The superior was Roger Babson, but he was not there during the time that I was employed.

Mr. NOLAN. What branch of the service was it?

Miss LILESTONE. It was the educational. The bureau of education.

Mr. NOLAN. And is it connected with the United States Employment Service?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. How long did you work there after that?

Miss LILESTONE. I worked—not quite—I would say just about a month. I received my dismissal; the letter was dated on the 9th; and I received my dismissal; it was dated on the 9th, and I received it on the 11th.

Mr. BLANTON. Of what month?

Miss LILESTONE. October.

Mr. NOLAN. You were there just one month?

Miss LILESTONE. You have the letter there, Mr. BLANTON. I think that I gave it to you.

Mr. BLANTON. You have a document here from the Civil Service Commission in which it shows that you made a rating of 81?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERSEY. Let us see the letter of dismissal. What does it state?

Mr. BLANTON. Here is your dismissal, signed by Mr. S. J. Gompers, chief clerk, and there is your dismissal [handing letters to Miss Lilestone].

Mr. HERSEY. This is dated the 16th.

Miss LILESTONE. I entered the service on the 12th.

Mr. BLANTON. Please read the dismissal.

Miss LILESTONE. "October 10, 1918. Miss J. Raynes Lilestone. By direction of the acting chief of the service, your services as clerk at $1,100 per annum in the industrial plants position have been discontinued, effective at the close of October 9, 1918. Robert C. Starr, chief clerk, information and education service."

This gentleman, as I understand it, is a member of the union.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you go to see that gentleman after you received that letter?

Miss LILESTONE. I did; and he said that he had orders from the department head to dismiss me.

Mr. BLANTON. And then did you ask him the reason for your dismissal, Miss Lilestone?

Miss LILESTONE. I asked him the reason for my dismissal; and if you gentlemen will just let me explain—they never gave me a chance.

Senator KENYON. Do you mean that they never gave you a chance from the time that you went there?

Miss LILESTONE. They never gave me an opportunity. Of course, I knew I made good.

Senator KENYON. Then, what do you mean by saying that they never gave you a chance?

Miss LILESTONE. They never gave me any reasons why such a dismissal was sent; they never gave me a hearing or anything of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. And right after that you were employed by the Commission on Training Camp Activities in the War Department?

Mr. CASEY. Wait one minute. Is it not a fact that the information and educational services is one of the emergency divisions set up in the Department of Labor during the war?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes; I think it is.

Senator KENYON. Were there any others discharged about the time you left?

Miss LILESTONE. Not that I know of. I knew very few people there.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is a certificate from the Commission on Training Camp Activities showing that you worked for them. Would the committee mind her reading that, showing that her services were satisfactory?

Senator KENYON. That was after that?

Mr. HERSEY. I would like to know how long after she was discharged that she went to work for some other branch of the service?

Miss LILESTONE. Just shortly after; in fact, the very following week. I saw that my means were very limited on account of the conditions existing here, and I made an application to the administration—the Railroad Administration—and I received a position, beginning at a salary of $1,500 per year; but on account of my physical condition, due to the experience that I had undergone—that is, the humiliation part of it—it was not the question of work but it was the humiliation part of it—I broke down and was taken ill, and I was compelled to go into the hospital. When I came out I made application to the War Camp Activities——

Mr. BLANTON. Let me read that.

JANUARY 14, 1919.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Miss J. Rayne Lilestone has worked in the accounting office of the Commission on Training Camp Activities from December 11 to January 11, 1919, upon a special piece of work which is now completed, and we are therefore giving Miss Lilestone a release. Her work for the Commission on Training Camp Activities has been very satisfactory.

CHESTER C. WATERS,
Chief Accountant.

Now, Miss Lilestone, after that you had an appointment from the War Department, the purchase, storage, and traffic division, General Staff, dated March 21, giving you employment at $1,100?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. When did you cease to be employed by the War Department? You were employed by the War Department up to when?

Miss LILESTONE. Up to the 23d.

Mr. BLANTON. The 23d of June?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And the 23d was the day before yesterday?

Miss LILESTONE. Day before yesterday; yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That was Monday?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir. With the purchase, storage, and traffic division.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Miss Lilestone, I will ask you, while you were working for this War Department, if any person who purported to be interested in organized labor, and who had previously known you in the Labor Department when you worked there, had occasion to see you working in the War Department, and have a conversation with you, and if so, state who it was and when it occurred?

Miss LILESTONE. I was sitting at my desk, and I was approached by a lady whom I did not recognize immediately, and she says, "What are you doing here?" I said, "Why, I have a perfect right to be here. I am under civil service." She said, "Are you a member of the employees' league?" I said, "I am not." Then I said to her, "What is your name?" I thought perhaps she was one of the members of the department there. She said, "I was with the Federal Employment Service." I did not remember her. I said, "I do not know your name." I said, "What is your name?" She said, "I can not tell you." Then she disappeared from the room. A gentleman in charge there——

Mr. BLANTON. Now, just a minute, in that connection; during that conversation did she give you any information of whether or not you would be permitted to remain in the War Department?

Miss LILESTONE. Well, she intimated—she——

Mr. MACCRATE. Not what she intimated; tell us what she said. What did she say?

Miss LILESTONE. Well, she said it would be safer to be a member of the employees' union, but I paid very little attention to it, because those things—I thought that the Government would take care of its employees without having to join an organization in this country.

Mr. MACCRATE. Just give us the conversation. State what this conversation was. Is that all of the conversation?

Mr. BLANTON. You are out of a position right now, are you?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And you are dependent on working for a living?

Miss LILESTONE. I am.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you ever see me in your life until a short time ago?

Miss LILESTONE. I never knew you.

Mr. HERSEY. Was there any reason for your discharge from the last position? Have you that discharge?

Miss LILESTONE. You have my dismissal there, Mr. BLANTON?

Mr. BLANTON. May I say this to the committee: There may be not only an effort to attack the standing of the witnesses, but also an effort to attack me, and I want to say that I am amply able mentally, morally, and physically to maintain any position that I take in the House, before this committee, or anywhere else. I am amply able to do that, and I want the fellows who have been attacking this good woman to understand that I am going to protect the people who are brave enough——

Mr. MACCRATE. I trust that we will have——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). I do not like to have them send a special secret-service man out to stand under my nose.

The CHAIRMAN. You may put in your testimony.

Mr. MACCRATE. In that dismissal, did they give any reason for her dismissal?

Miss LILESTONE. They did not; and I demanded an explanation, and I wanted it in writing.

Senator KENYON. Miss Lilestone, at the time of this talk that you had with this lady in the Department of Labor; it occurred in the hall, you say?

Miss LILESTONE. Well, the rooms are just a large room. I do not know whether it is a hall.

Senator KENYON. Were you sitting down or standing up?

Miss LILESTONE. No; I was standing up.

Senator KENYON. Was the person a woman?

Miss LILESTONE. A woman.

Senator KENYON. What kind of a looking woman was she?

Miss LILESTONE. It seems to me that she was a blonde.

Senator KENYON. Was she the same woman that talked to you in the War Department.

Miss LILESTONE. No.

Senator KENYON. Did you ever see her afterwards?

Miss LILESTONE. I never did.

Senator KENYON. And in about a week after that you were discharged, you say?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Senator KENYON. Do you know of others in there who did not belong to unions?

Miss LILESTONE. No, sir.

Mr. HERSEY. Do you know whether the Employment Bureau had anything to do with your dismissal?

Miss LILESTONE. I do not; but from my standpoint it looked as though they did, as though they had agents all through the departments. It looked very plain to me, but I gave it very little thought.

Mr. MACCRATE. Now, this second lady that asked you about the United States employees' league, what was her description?

Miss LILESTONE. She was a blonde, but not the same one.

Mr. MACCRATE. And she came right in and walked right out again——

Miss LILESTONE (interrupting). Yes, sir.

Mr. MACCRATE. And just simply said to you that you had better join the union, and she left you right away?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the committee hear Miss Cunningham now?

The CHAIRMAN. We will hear anyone.

Mr. NOLAN. Before the lady leaves the witness stand, I think that the—she has intimated that she thought the United States Employment Service had agents around these departments. Now, Mr. Chairman, is it fair to permit questions affecting the service—if it is, I think it also fair to permit the service, or those representing the service, to defend themselves and cross-examine the witness.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

Mr. NOLAN. It is a matter for this committee to decide, and I ask that the other side be entitled to cross-examine the witness if they care to. Mr. Densmore is here.

Mr. MACCRATE. I do not think that any cross-examination is necessary so far as this witness is concerned.

Mr. NOLAN. Well, one of her last statements was that the United States Employment Service had agents throughout the departments.

Mr. MACCRATE. But they can meet that statement when they go on the stand.

Mr. NOLAN. I ask that the representative of the Employment Service, if he so desires, be permitted to cross-examine this witness.

Miss LILESTONE. May I speak a word just a moment?

Mr. NOLAN. I am only suggesting that they be asked if they want to cross-examine the witness.

Mr. HERSEY. If we pursue that policy there will be no end to the hearing.

Miss LILESTONE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). Unless they want it; that is all I want from you.

Miss LILESTONE. I want to take the time——

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment.

Senator KENYON. If the witness wants to say something, she may do so.

Mr. BLANTON. I am through with her.

Miss LILESTONE. I was asked by Grace Porter Hopkins, who is superintendent of the Women's Division of the Employment Bureau, and her story is a lengthy one, if you want to listen to it now. She asked me if I was a member of the Employees' League, and I told her no, and she said that "it would be safer for you to become a member of it."

(The following letter was thereafter ordered by the chairman to be incorporated in the record in full, as follows:)

JUNE 27.

Hon. J. M. C. SMITH,
Chairman of the Joint Committee on Labor,
Senate Room 201, Capitol, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In my testimony before the committee which is investigating the Employment Bureau of the Department of Labor, owing to the limited time allowed me, I was unable to state the following facts, which I would like to appear in the record:

Owing to physical breakdown, due to my experience in the Education Information Bureau of the Department of Labor, I transferred my $1,500 position to a man who was in need of employment. This, on the assurance of Mrs. Grace Porter Hopkins, Chief of the Employment Bureau, that she would secure me another position when my strength would permit me to resume work.

After explaining to her my extreme financial condition, I then asked Mrs. Hopkins if the Government made any provision for hospital treatment for its employees at reasonable rates. She answered in the affirmative, and sent me to Providence Hospital, saying that the Government would bear my expenses while there. My expenses authorized by Mrs. Hopkins were $35 per week. This hospital bill has not been paid by the Department of Labor.

Probably because I am not a member of the Employees' Union, the Employment Bureau has made no effort to secure me a position. I was not only advised by Mrs. Hopkins and Mrs. Neal, another chief of the same division, to leave Washington, but efforts were made by their clerks to get me out of the city.

Very truly yours,

JULIA RAYNES LILESTONE,
826 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR UNINTERESTED

Mr. Speaker, after the committee showed that it was absolutely uninterested in the testimony of Miss Cunningham, disclosing that she was forced to join a union in order to hold her Government position in Washington, and that about the only interest Mr. Nolan and Mr. MacCrate seemed to take in the fact that Miss Lilestone had been dismissed from the Department of Labor and hounded from department to department by purported representatives of the United States Employment Service, apparently because she would not join a union, was the assertion that the service would clear itself as soon as its representatives testified, I deemed it futile to go into the question further, and offered no other of the available witnesses on that point.

And, Mr. Speaker, that my colleagues and the country may be again reminded of something about Mr. Luther C. Steward, president of the Federal Employees' Union, let me again quote the statement of Mr. Charles H. Burroughs, one of the auditors of the United States Government, to wit:

STATEMENT FROM GOVERNMENT AUDITOR

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 9, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
United States Representative, City.

DEAR SIR: Answering, as requested, in detail your specific inquiries, will state:

My name is Charles H. Burroughs; live at 221 B Street NE.; am now one of the auditors in the United States Shipping Board, employed in room 1046, Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

First, I would like to state that in answering your inquiries I am not volunteering information; that I am dependent upon my position for a livelihood, and hope that you will not cause me to lose my position with the Government.

You are correct in stating that formerly I was Chief of Transportation and Revolving Fund Section of the United States Employment Service. I voluntarily left such position.

Relative to your inquiry concerning record of travel vouchers of Special Representative Luther C. Steward for the months of July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1918, wherein Mr. Steward claimed and there was allowed to him for travel expense: For July, $134.45; for August, $127.25; for September, $87.50; for October, $113.25; for November, $120.50; and for December, 1918, $127.50, per vouchers numbered, respectively, 197, 2450, 6248, 9656, 14331, and 18495. I am familiar with such departmental matters. Numerous parties connected with the service were furnished with transportation books containing printed requests and stubs in same, and such parties would present such requests, filled out by them, to the railroads and get transportation, and their books, with the stubs, were supposed to be returned to the department. The claim of Mr. Steward was in addition to such transportation furnished by the railroads. Thousands of dollars were absolutely wasted in this way. I doubt whether one-third of these books were ever returned and filed with the department. It can not be shown that it was necessary for Mr. Steward to make these trips. He was receiving in the neighborhood of $3,500 or more from the Government and at the same time drew about $2,750 from the Employees' Union, and for a time, at least, his wife worked in the Munition Building at about $1,100. If this service is properly audited, it will be found that thousands of vouchers were issued in irregular and unnecessary transportation, and it will also be found that there were numerous details made from stations merely to enable parties to draw their $4 per diem in addition to their salaries and travel transportation. It was wholly unnecessary for Mr. Hibbard and Mr. Harry H. Stone to take that expensive trip to France. Mr. Harry S. Parks took many unnecessary trips at great expense. Relative to the transportation voucher and three Pullman tickets issued to Miss Jeannette Densmore, sister of the director general, from New York to Atlantic City on July 4, 1918, and the return by Miss Densmore from Atlantic City to New York on July 7, 1918, will state that is only one of hundreds of such trips such agents took on the expense of the Government. In my opinion, the business management of the whole department was rotten. Answering your inquiry, will state that, in my judgment, had Congress allowed the proposed $10,000,000 appropriation requested in February that at least two-thirds of same would have been wasted. It would be a waste of public money for Congress to allow this United States Employment Service any more appropriations until the whole service has been properly audited and investigated and reorganized on proper business lines. It has been continually stated that much has been done and is being done for the returning soldier. Reports of this work are padded and is mostly propaganda, as I do not believe that returning soldiers have received any benefit from the great bulk of the enormous expenditures wasted by this service. I was absolutely disgusted with the system and practice.

If the department is properly investigated, Congress will be astounded at the revelation awaiting accounting.

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES H. BURROUGHS.

And since we have gotten Director John B. Densmore separated from the United States Employment Service he has gone into the banking business here in Washington.

TO FIGHT AS THEY HAVE NEVER FOUGHT BEFORE

Mr. M. A. Bodenhamer, president of the Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, here in Washington, has recently issued a large circular, dated September 30, 1921, calling attention to the fight I am making to free the Government Printing Office from the slavery of the union closed shop, and he admonishes his members as follows:

"Every element of organized labor should know that the fight for our very existence is on; and knowing it, prepare to fight as they have never fought before. Standing as solidly together in the future as the International Typographical Union has stood in the past, there can be no question as to the outcome; but we must stand together—internal bickerings must be laid by until the outside enemy is defeated—or, as the immortal Franklin said, 'We will hang separately.'"

And to show you that the typographical union will not let even union men attend to their own business way down in Texas, I quote the following from the Brownwood Bulletin:

"A STATEMENT TO THE PUBLIC

"To whom it may concern:

"Inasmuch as unnecessary publicity has repeatedly been brought forward which we have heretofore ignored, in pursuance of the latest developments from the 'seat of war,' it is our intention to make a straightforward statement that interested friends may not be misled in interpreting our position.

"Several months ago the matter was suggested that inasmuch as the reconstruction days had forced to the front matters that we felt might be satisfactorily carried out in the eastern cities and large centers, but would prove a burden and hardship upon the frontier, the question was submitted to the local union whether we maintain or surrender our charter for a time, until the objectionable handicaps should be adjusted. The vote was taken and those present, by a large majority, voted to send in the charter. The question was then raised that San Angelo chapel, which was under our jurisdiction, had a right to vote on this question. To be fair and reasonable the opposition were granted another opportunity to prove that 'Big I' was indeed and in fact 'the majority.' Thirty days after, at the next regular session, the question was again submitted and again the majority voted to surrender the charter, and the secretary was instructed to send in the books to headquarters, which was done, and the equipment was duly received and the receipt and acceptance was regularly acknowledged by National Secretary J. W. Hays in these words:

"AUGUST 31, 1921.

"'DEAR MR. CHARNQUIST: I have your letter of August 27. The charter and supplies of No. 737 reached this office yesterday.'

"Since the settlement of these affairs the opposition have done all in their power to discountenance the Bulletin force, and by distributing cards, publishing display ads, and other means have endeavored to injure in various ways the standing of this, the majority contingent, and to injure the Bulletin financially by making it appear that they had adopted nonunion rules, and to a representative of I. T. U. they wailed that the whole business had been done illegally. Why didn't 'Big II' compel it to transpire legally? They say that, contrary to rules, members without 'paid-up working cards' were allowed to vote. Why didn't the officer on the throne see to it that they had paid up or that they had no franchise?

"We thought matters would adjust themselves. Only an occasional puff of smoke and a blare of trumpets gave evidence that mischief was brewing.

"Several days since, a scout from the front appeared upon the scene and the enemy marched from behind their camouflage with stately tread and a blare of trumpets, and so mightily did they blow that verily we believe their brains went out at the big end of the horn.

"Behold what they did. Next day the scout scouted all the way to San Angelo to call for recruits to organize a Brownwood local union, leaving the rear guard to hold the fort. The scout scouted back and, evidently failing to round up the recruits, came back and reported that he had decided to wire to headquarters to send 'back the original charter, pronto.' Had this been done by a full representation of the defunct local, it would have put us back where we were before the surrender and the same officers would be in office and Mr. P. H. Charnquist would naturally have received the returned equipment. He did not receive it.

"The next bale of guncotton hurled at us was a stunner because of its idiocy and rank bolshevik venom and bluff.

"Anyone even slightly versed in parliamentary usages knows that the membership of a union meet, discuss, plan, formulate, and through the assistance of committees decide upon, set a date—always time sufficient to "get together"—confer, and arbitrate, if allowed. Upon failure to adjust differences an ultimatum is forwarded to the business concerns or managers of the opposition forces. We are at a loss to know just what sort of document the following specimen is—it's hard and taxes our ingenuity to classify. Here it is:

"'STRIKE ORDER

"'This is to notify the journeymen printers of Brownwood that by authority of the executive council of the International Typographical Union the charter of the Brownwood Union has been returned and will be retained by a sufficient number of card holders under the old number. A reorganization of officers has been effected.

"'The management of the Brownwood Bulletin and the Greenwood Printing Co. having seen fit to refuse to comply with certain working conditions instituted by the entire membership of the International Typographical Union, the local union, by authority of the executive council, herewith notifies the journeymen printers of the said Bulletin office and the Greenwood Printing Co. that these offices will not be open to organized labor after Friday, October 7.

"'Those employees desiring to renew or retain their membership cards in the International Typographical Union must cease their connection with the said offices on the above date or automatically sever their relationship with the International Typographical Union, forfeiting all benefits and insurance and privilege of future membership, except under conditions imposed by the international executive council.

"'Members complying with this strike order will be paid the customary benefits by the headquarters office of $17 per week for single men and $22 for married men as long as they are unemployed.'

"Analyzed, first paragraph stands:

"Notify journeymen printers.

"Authority executive council.

"Charter returned.

"Will be retained by sufficient number of card holders.

"Reorganization of officers has been effected.

"Although not permitted to participate, we are regarded as journeymen printers, and that the suffering minority is unqualifiedly empowered to ram down our throats an organization whether we wish it or not. Horrors! Next the old charter has been returned and will be maintained by sufficient number. Wonder how many? Must their safe be 'burgled' to find the list—probably was not published for 'lack' of space.' And then comes the coy little flip: 'A reorganization of officers' has been effected. It seems the 'officers were reorganized all right.'

"About 3.30 p. m. on that eventful day, October 7, A. D. 1921, this little bomb was placed upon the work benches of these journeymen printers. At first glance it appeared 'innocent' enough, but it carried suspicious odors, sulphuric and dynamic; and the sputtering fuze gave warning that the receptacle was masterfully charged with 'hot air.' 'O mores! Oh h—ll.' One hour and thirty minutes' notice to act upon a mighty question of state! A history-making epoch of stupendous significance! After October 7 the offices of the Daily Bulletin and the Greenwood Printing Co. must snap its doors and forever inclose us within the toils, with no escape made ready, and subject to the penalties imposed upon us by the international executive council.

"We poor, downtrodden journeymen are not aware that penalties were assessed against us. Then to revive our drooping spirits we are tendered an 'all-day sucker' wrapped up in the sweet little missive; that strikers will be paid the princely sum of $17 and $22 per week, and the writer says headquarters will pay the bill. At the end of the funeral oration appears the name of the high and mighty ruler of this local as president. Tears perhaps obscures the signature of the secretary, and our strongest reading glass fails to bring out the faintest outline of a seal, usually so boldly placed in the convenient left-hand lower corner, which custom wisely set aside for parade of authority. And wonder of wonders! the boasted emblem upon which all union craftsmen depend for proof of genuineness—the label—escaped the argus eyes of its sponsors and decamped, probably ashamed to submit itself to such ignoble uses.

"Another explosion occurred in the last issue of the Semi-Weekly News, as follows:

"'BROWNWOOD TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION REORGANIZED

"'After several months of restlessness during which time a certain element of members of the Brownwood Typographical Union "railroaded" by a superior force of numbers the surrender of the charter, that body is again reorganized. This was effected through the aid of a representative from the international headquarters at Indianapolis.

"'Since the reorganization and as matters now stand, the employees of the Brownwood Semi-Weekly News constitute the only union shop in Brownwood.'

"The ultimatum reached us 3.30 Friday, to take effect at 5 p. m. Anticipating and unable to hold in check their elation over the horrible slaughter of the vast majority, instead of waiting their souls in patience to see the effect of their last bombardment they read off the dead list and printed the obituary in the News that night and called for an attorney to read the last will and testament, setting up claims of heirship and stated that 'as matters now stand, the employees of the Brownwood Semi-Weekly News constitute the only union shop in Brownwood.' Naturally all these things, if true, were news to us and we obtained a search warrant to discover the emblem of authority—the label. We could not find it, and it was not there unless we overlooked it stowed away snugly in the middle of a display advertisement. If they were reorganized or had the old charter restored, why did they not put in evidence their label?

"Everything we did in these matters was open and above board, but the opposition branded themselves when they refused to submit themselves to the will of the majority, and all of these evasions and false representations are disgusting and we are sure do not appeal to the conservative, thinking union element of Brownwood. The Bulletin has and are carrying out the policy followed for the past several years and have acted fairly to their employees in every way, and do not merit the misrepresentations and attacks directed at them by two or three disgruntled individuals who are governed by self-exultation and a desire to 'come back' and heap vengeance upon those who dare to have their own opinions and fail to bow their knees to the high and mighty wizard leading the klan.

"THE JOURNEYMEN PRINTERS OF THE BULLETIN FORCE."

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me add that it is now up to President Harding, Vice President Coolidge, his Cabinet, and Congress to clean up this Government Printing Office and the other departments of the Government and establish the American open shop. The people of the United States are going to stand for nothing else. They are not going to accept any side-stepping or passing the buck. The Republican Party is in absolute control of the Government and has a majority of 170 Members in the House of Representatives. What is it going to do about it?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the foregoing, omitting French's letter, is an exact reprint of my expunged official report on the Government Printing Office, word for word, as same was printed on pages 7417 to 7425 inclusive of the original daily issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for October 22, 1921. This is the report that the Republican floor leader, Mr. Frank H. Mondell, caused to be expunged. There was not one single improper word in my entire report. The only improper language in it was that of the union foreman, Huber, applied to his fellow Government worker, French, contained in said deleted sworn statement of French, then on file as a Government archive in the Government Printing Office, which deleted language I quote in my report.

I was not disseminating improper language. I was endeavoring to stop its use by Government employees while transacting public business. I was bringing its use to the attention of Congress. There was no other way to apprise the other 434 Congressmen and 96 Senators of its use by Government employees toward their fellows. I believed that my colleagues would welcome knowledge of same, and would commend me for the hard work I did in bringing it to their attention. I was merely performing my official duty as a Representative of this Government. With such facts before me, I would not have done my duty had I done less.

UNION LEADERS AMBUSHED ME

Unions here realized that there was no answer to the facts established by my report. They could not afford to have same made public. They were determined to obliterate my report. So they persuaded the floor leader of the House, Mr. Mondell, to have it expunged. And without notice to me, when the House met on October 24, 1921, Mr. Mondell moved to expunge my entire report, and moved the previous question, which cut off all debate. I implored him to give me 10 minutes to explain same, but he refused. I asked him to expunge only the French statement, and to allow my report to remain, but he refused. He was determined to get my entire report out of the RECORD. And he forced an immediate vote, with the Members hurriedly called over to vote without knowing my side of the controversy. Naturally they voted to expunge my report, and it was expunged.

UNION LEADERS HERE WERE DETERMINED TO GET RID OF ME

The next day Majority Leader Mondell moved to put me out of Congress. It was an afterthought. Union leaders here demanded it. He did not refer the question to a committee, required by an unbroken line of precedents. He did not give me counsel, which has been given by Congress to every Member whose seat was at issue. He did not confront me with witnesses, and let me cross-examine them. He did not give me any time to prepare my defense. He did not give me sufficient time to present my defense. He pushed his resolution to take my seat from me, based on his mere statement that I had printed improper language in the RECORD, causing the public throughout the United States to believe that I had used improper language, when my whole desire and purpose was to stop its use by Government employees when transacting Government business.

I then urged Leader Mondell to permit my report to go back into the RECORD, as there was nothing improper in it. He objected, and thus kept it out, for it required unanimous consent to put it back.

There were 302 Republicans then Members of the House. Mr. Mondell was their party leader. He thus controlled a majority of 170 votes. He called many Republican Members to his office, and as their leader urged them to vote to put me out. But altogether he could muster only 204 votes against me out of a total membership of 435 Congressmen. His 302 Republicans knew that his motion to put me out would be voted upon, and could have been there to vote with their leader had they desired.

CONGRESSMAN EDWARD W. POU, OF NORTH CAROLINA

During the Wilson administration Congressman EDWARD W. POU was chairman of the great Committee on Rules. He is now the ranking Democrat thereon. Replying to Mr. Mondell's insistence that I be put out, Congressman POU then said:

> The Member from Texas has printed in the RECORD an affidavit which speaks the truth concerning an occurrence in the Government Printing Office. The truth of the matter contained in the affidavit has not been challenged by anyone. We must therefore assume the accuracy of same. * * * When you expel him for telling the truth about an occurrence in a public institution, you may raise an issue and set a precedent which will rise up to plague you hereafter.

IT DID RISE UP TO PLAGUE MONDELL THEREAFTER

Mr. Mondell had been the sole and only Congressman from the whole State of Wyoming for 26 years continuously. He was the Republican floor leader of the House. He ran for the Senate in the first election thereafter, and while Wyoming elected a Republican to succeed him in Congress, Mr. Mondell was able to carry only one county in the entire State of Wyoming—the county of Goshen. Every other county in the State went against him. While our present distinguished colleague, Mr. WINTER, a Republican, carried Wyoming by a majority of 3,868 votes to succeed Mr. Mondell in Congress, Mr. Mondell's opponent, a Democrat, carried Wyoming by a majority of 9,107 votes for the Senate. And thus in 1922 Mr. Mondell was put out of Congress by the decisive vote of his own people, while the people I have the honor to represent have kept me in Congress continuously.

In its issue of November 8, 1921, the Daily News of Little Rock, Ark., said:

> BLANTON employed initial letters and dashes to indicate the vile words. Had BLANTON not in some way brought the language out in his speech, he would not have made out his case.
> The News wants even one Member of Congress, who so violently opposed BLANTON'S use of the initial letters and dashes, to tell us just how BLANTON would have gotten the facts before the Congress if he had not used them.
> Be it said to BLANTON'S credit that if he fights hard he also fights fair, and that he fights for what he conscientiously believes is right.
> BLANTON did not indorse such language; he was condemning it. No little child and no woman would understand the letters and dashes.
>
> BLANTON believed that the people should know about it. And why shouldn't they? Does not the Government Printing Office belong to the people? Are they not entitled to know the conditions there?
> The tempest in the teapot would have been not so riotous if BLANTON'S exposé had not somewhat unsettled ancient customs at Washington and thrown the searchlight of public disapproval on some Government secrets that had been hidden in the closets these many years.
> Right and justice are American qualities, and by holding BLANTON up to public scorn Congress can not cover up the fact that the Government Printing Office at Washington is the most disgracefully conducted department in the whole American Government. BLANTON may be able to come back.

That was the sentiment of thousands of citizens from one side of the United States to the other, and from many newspapers, expressed in letters and clippings sent me by them. Just let me quote one of these letters typical of them all from a distinguished preacher, Rev. W. W. Pippin, jr.:

APPOMATTOX, VA., October 28, 1921.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: As a reader of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I am familiar with its contents.

I deeply regret that the rules of the House are such as not to permit a public record of facts. Such things are awful to repeat, but somehow I have a lingering conviction that under such circumstances a "verbatim" account best serves the ends of justice.

Be assured, dear Congressman, that "truth crushed to the earth will rise again," and long after this is forgotten you will be wafted high on the wings of your noble struggle for justice. Be assured of my sincere prayers, sympathy, and respect.

W. W. PIPPIN, Jr.

Mr. Mondell was in no way concerned about punishing Levi Huber for using this "awful" language to his fellow employee. He took no steps to punish Huber.

On March 13, 1922, about five months thereafter, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] stated that it was in his mind to say something that he had very frequently thought of; that he had never even made an inquiry privately about the matter, but he would like to know, and he wondered if any gentleman could tell him whether Levi Huber (the man who had used this bad language) was still in the employment of the Government. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] rang up the Government Printing Office to ascertain, and reported to the House that Huber was still employed there.

Let me read you a resolution that was passed by the Democratic district convention in my district last August, respecting my reelection:

Resolution passed by the Democratic convention at Abilene, Tex., on August 28, 1926

To the Democratic district convention for the seventeenth congressional district of Texas:

We, your committee on resolutions, duly selected and appointed by the Democratic district convention representing the Democrats in the 19 counties composing the seventeenth congressional district of Texas, to submit appropriate resolutions to said convention, each member of this committee being either a delegate or holding the lawful proxy of a delegate duly chosen and authenticated from some one of the 19 counties of this district, by unanimous agreement respectfully submit to this convention for adoption the following Resolution

Whereas in the recent Democratic primary election held July 24, 1926, Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Abilene, Tex., for the second consecutive time has carried each and all of the 19 counties in his district by an overwhelming majority in each county, carrying his former old home county of Shackelford by 996 votes for BLANTON and 228 for Smith, and carrying his home county of Taylor by a majority of 3,475 votes, his home box, known as Parish House Precinct No. 25, giving BLANTON a majority of 741 votes, he carrying each and every one of the 26 voting precincts in his home county by an enormous majority, said BLANTON receiving 45,257 votes in his district; and

Whereas in Burnet County, where his opponent lives and was county judge eight years, Congressman BLANTON carried each and every one of the 21 voting precincts in the home county of his opponent, he carrying Burnet County by 1,797 votes for BLANTON and only 821 for Smith; and

Whereas in Coleman County, where his opponent Smith maintained headquarters, and from which place Smith's campaign organization distributed much literature, placed many half-page advertisements against BLANTON in newspapers, directed Smith helpers and speakers over the district, and spent much money in efforts to defeat BLANTON, said Coleman being the home of Hon. Leon L. Shield, State Senator Walter C. Woodward, and Mayor E. P. Scarborough, who, in the Coleman Democrat-Voice of May 7, 1926, and in other newspapers over the district, were advertised as being strong supporters of Smith, Congressman BLANTON nevertheless carried each and every one of the 25 voting precincts of said Coleman County by a huge majority in each, he carrying said Coleman County by 3,449 votes for BLANTON and only 865 for Smith; and

Whereas the above demonstrates conclusively that the people of the seventeenth congressional district of Texas are practically unanimous in backing Congressman BLANTON in his fights to eliminate waste, extravagance, and graft from the business of this Government, and that he has their confidence, esteem, and commendation; and

Whereas were he in the United States Senate, Congressman BLANTON could accomplish more for the people and his opportunities there for effecting sane retrenchment of unnecessary expenses and helping to reduce taxes would be greatly multiplied: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Democrats of the seventeenth congressional district of Texas in convention assembled: (1) That we approve and commend the record of Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON and his work in Congress.

(2) That we heartily indorse Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON for the United States Senate and urge him to make the race for that position in 1928, and we pledge him our support; and we especially commend him to the people of Texas as being worthy and well qualified to hold such position with profit and benefit to the people.

* * * * * * *

(7) That we stand for fewer and better laws, for efficiency in public service, and for retrenchment in public expenditures.

The foregoing resolution was presented to the convention and adopted unanimously.

FRED COCKRELL,
Chairman, Democratic District Convention,
Seventeenth Congressional District of Texas.

Attest:
R. W. HAYNIE,
Secretary of the Convention.

Who are these people who signed and presented this resolution? Hon. Fred Cockrell, chairman of that convention, is the son of a former Congressman, Hon. J. V. Cockrell, of Texas, than whom there has never been a better patriot and statesman. He is a nephew of Hon. Francis Cockrell, a distinguished Senator from the State of Missouri in the United States Senate for years. Fred Cockrell is the best educated and best known farmer in the whole State of Texas.

Who is R. W. Haynie? He is the present president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, one of the biggest organizations of any kind in my State.

Ed. S. Hughes is a distinguished business man and financier. He has an office to-day in New York City. He is the president of the largest bank and of one of the biggest business concerns in my home city and spends nine months of each year in New York City.

Mrs. D. M. Oldham, jr., is the wife of the Federal referee in bankruptcy in my city, a Democrat appointed by a Democratic judge, not a Republican judge.

Mr. W. R. Keeble is a distinguished and reputable banker in my district.

Mr. John Guitar is one of the largest business men in my district. Hon. E. N. Kirby was for 12 years mayor of his home city. Hon. Jas. P. Stinson was for years prosecuting attorney for an adjoining judicial district to my own judicial district, and he is now the Democratic county chairman of his county, and he is also the Democratic district chairman of my seventeenth congressional district.

Mr. W. P. Head is a distinguished citizen in my district, a prominent ranchman. Hon. M. S. Long is the district judge of that district over which I presided as judge for eight years. Mrs. G. L. Gregg is the wife of a prominent merchant of my district. Mr. R. G. Cogdell is one of the highly respected plumbers of my home city, and a splendid gentleman. Lloyd B. Thomas was formerly a very prominent editor in Texas, but now in another business. Mr. D. D. Parramore is a prominent ranchman. Mr. M. B. Hanks owns one of the largest daily newspapers in my district.

Mr. Chairman, I feel I have the right to take this time under these circumstances. I want to say to my new colleagues in the House, when you know you are right, if every man on this floor is against you, do not be afraid. Do not hesitate to proceed if you know that you are right; but first know that you are right. You will find these men here, your colleagues, the fairest men in the world when they fully understand a proposition. The fairest men on earth are these colleagues of yours when they understand a question.

I came to Congress 11 years ago prejudiced against Hon. Champ Clark, of Missouri, that great statesman, and then I learned to love him. Do you know what caused me to be prejudiced against him? Reading lies about him in the press. I was prejudiced against him—a great man whose greatness will grow greater as the years go on. [Applause.] One day he said to me, "BLANTON, this House is just as full of moods as a dog is full of flees, and when the House gets in a mood nothing on earth will change it; you might just as well let it alone." And that is as true as anything. Our colleagues get in a certain attitude sometimes, and this House is as liable to do a wrong as is an individual when it does not understand the situation; but in the end it will do justice. I have the strongest lifelong friends that I have ever made in my life in this House, and do not you think I do not appreciate my association with all of them. There is no greater honor that can be conferred upon any man than to be a Member of this House, and to my new colleagues I want to say that there is room here for you. You need not be on the Committee on Ways and Means, you need not be on the Committee on Appropriations, you need not be on the great Rules Committee to accomplish things. This committee that is operating right now is the main committee for a Congressman, and all 435 Members of us are members of it, and you have your rights here. If you will stay here on the floor in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when these supply bills are being considered and framed—and here is where they are finally framed—you will find that you have just as much rank and authority here as any other Member if you know the rules, whether you be the chairman of a committee or not. Here is the place where you may exercise your prerogative as a Representative of the people of your district. Here is the place to be heard.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman has made the statement that he loves the House and the Members of the House. It is rumored around in the great Democratic district that I represent, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is figuring on leaving this House. Does he love it so well that he can leave it and go somewhere else? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I shall let the Speaker of this House whom we all love—Democrats as well as Republicans—answer, when he said on Monday that he would rather be Speaker of this House of Representatives than hold any other office within the gift of the people. Is that an answer for the present?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not think so, because it is rumored that the gentleman wants to leave this body and go somewhere else in this Capitol and represent a great party and a great State.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not a candidate for any office right now [laughter] but am busy here about the public business, and until the appropriation bills are framed and passed by this body I will not be a candidate for any office. When we get through and pass the supply bills that our distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] brings in here to supply with needed funds the departments of the Government, which will be along about the last of February, and after I have performed my duties here as a Representative by working and voting on these supply bills and helping the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to keep them within the budget recommendations, as I expect to do, then after that I may make an announcement for some office of some kind.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman may be persuaded?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not refuse an office if elected. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me further answer the gentleman in this way: I have heard it said there will be fact that he is or is not a member of any particular religious or fraternal organization. I have stated my position to officers of labor organizations and they have readily agreed that I was entirely right in this viewpoint as Public Printer. Furthermore, for the first time in many years the collection of dues to unions and other organizations has been discontinued in the office during working hours, and this also has been readily acceded to by the representatives of the organizations affected thereby. Likewise the designated representative of the union, or chapel chairman as he is sometimes called, has discontinued the practice of notifying the men in his room when they should begin and stop work, I having taken the position that this is the function of the officers of the Government. Again, I have appointed a number of noncraftsmen to positions which, I understand, at least some of the unions regarded as belonging to their particular trades, and this also has been done without any objection whatever from these organizations.

I also note in your "Extension of remarks" a protest from a helper in the Government Printing Office because such employees have not been given an opportunity to learn a trade in this shop. I respectfully invite your attention to the fact that Congress, in the printing act of January 12, 1895, limited the number of apprentices which the Public Printer might appoint to 25 and that since that time no apprentices have been employed in this office. I am pleased to advise you, however, that several months ago I took up the subject of an apprenticeship system in this office, and under date of August 29 received a report from the committee which I had appointed unanimously recommending the employment of apprentices for the various trades in the Government Printing Office. As soon as the necessary details can be worked out I hope to put an apprenticeship system in effect, with the approval of the Civil Service Commission, which has already informally advised me they will gladly assist in such a plan.

I am inclined to believe, therefore, that I have remained faithful to my promise to conduct this office to the best interests of the American people and not at the dictation of any particular clique or organization of men, whether they be unionists or antiunionists. As long as I am Public Printer, whatever my personal views may be, there is only one course for me to pursue, and that is to conduct this office as a shop open to both union and nonunion workmen, at least until Congress may otherwise direct. On the other hand, I can not permit the opponents of organized labor * * * to drive union men out of this office or deny them their rights as American citizens. In other words, union and nonunion men must and do look alike to me, and will receive the same treatment from me so long as I may remain in charge of the Government's printing office.

Yours truly,

GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, last spring, immediately after the adjournment of Congress, I took up the Attorney General's opinion on the McNary-Haugen bill, and I went over it carefully, read all the decisions that he cited, and then dictated a statement which I have before me. I thought possibly this statement might be of interest to those who favor farm-relief legislation, and that is my excuse for taking this opportunity of bringing it to your attention and getting it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

THE M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OPINION

Mr. Chairman, accompanying the veto message of the President on the McNary-Haugen bill was the opinion of the Attorney General setting forth his constitutional objections to that bill. In the last paragraph of that opinion the Attorney General presents the grounds on which he relies to base his conclusion that the said bill, if enacted into law, would violate the Constitution of the United States, to wit:

First. In that it takes from the President the constitutional Executive power and duty of making appointments to fill the office created by it and by legislation confers that power upon others.

Second. In that Congress delegates its constitutional power of legislation to private cooperative associations and corporations, and individuals acting collectively, and the board created by the statute.

Third. In that it contravenes the provisions of the Constitution against the taking of property without due process of law.

First. The first objection of the Attorney General to the constitutionality of the McNary-Haugen bill was by me discussed on the floor of the House of Representatives in my speeches on the constitutionality of that bill on May 10, 1926, and on February 17, 1927. There is serious doubt in my own mind as to the constitutionality of that portion of the bill providing for the nominating committees. However, as I stated in my speech of February 17 last, the unconstitutionality of the provision for nominating committees would not carry with it the provision creating the Federal farm board itself. These two provisions are clearly separable, so that the invalidity of the former would not impair the validity of the latter. The constitutionality of the provision establishing the Federal farm board has never been questioned to my knowledge by anyone. If the provision for nominating committees is unconstitutional, then it naturally follows that the nominations to the Federal farm board would be made by the President in the usual way. In view of what I have just presented on the separability of the provision for nominating committees, and even conceding said provision is or may be declared to be unconstitutional, I do not regard that the first objection raised by the Attorney General to the constitutionality of the bill presents a justifiable ground on which to base a veto.

Second. The second objection of the Attorney General is that Congress delegates its constitutional power of legislation to private cooperative associations and corporations, and individuals acting collectively, and the board created by statute. This objection against the constitutionality of the McNary-Haugen bill as it was framed in the Senate and passed by the House without amendment during the closing days of the last Congress presents, in my opinion, the most dangerous issue that has been raised against the constitutionality of the bill in the form it was submitted to the President. It behooves the proponents of farm-relief legislation embodying the McNary-Haugen principles to give heed. The Attorney General cites a number of cases to support his position on this point. Before the Attorney General rendered his opinion I had read every case cited by him in support of his second objection, and since reading his opinion I have re-read every case cited by him. It is quite evident that on this point the McNary-Haugen bill of the second session of the last Congress is more vulnerable than was the Haugen bill which was reported to and considered by the House of Representatives during the first session of the last Congress. In fact, I think that the latter bill was free from this constitutional objection. The issue is whether Congress in the McNary-Haugen bill of the second session of the last Congress undertook to delegate its power to make a law. It must be conceded that the Congress can not delegate its power to make a law. In drafting a new bill due weight and careful consideration should be given to this constitutional objection of the Attorney General. In my speech of February 17 I quoted from Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649, at 693, 694) for the guidance of Members of the House in determining what is and what is not a delegation of legislative power. The quotation referred to points out clearly the scope of and the limitations on legislative power in this regard and reads as follows:

> "The true distinction," as Judge Ranney, speaking for the Supreme Court of Ohio, has well said, "is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made." (Cincinnati, Wilmington, etc., Railroad v. Commissioners, 1 Ohio St. 88.) In Moers v. City of Reading (21 Penn. St. 188, 202) the language of the court was: "Half of the statutes on our books are in the alternative, depending on the discretion of some person or persons to whom is confided the duty to determine whether the proper occasion exists for executing them. But it can not be said that the exercise of such discretion is the making of the law." So, in Locke's Appeal (72 Penn. St. 491, 498): "To assert that a law is less than a law because it is made to depend on a future event or act is to rob the legislature of the power to act wisely for the public welfare whenever a law is passed relating to a state of affairs not yet developed or to things future and impossible to fully know." The proper distinction, the court said, was this: "The legislature can not delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government. There are many things upon which wise and useful legislation must depend which can not be known to the law-making power and must, therefore, be a subject of inquiry and determination outside of the halls of legislation."

Third. The reasons given by the Attorney General in support of his third objection, that the McNary-Haugen bill contravenes the provisions of the Constitution against the taking of property without due process of law, are not at all persuasive. The only case cited by him in support of his position is Parkersburg v. Brown (106 U. S. 487). The main issue in this case was whether the Legislature of West Virginia acted within its constitutional power in authorizing the city of Parkersburg to issue its bonds for the purpose of lending the same to persons engaged in manufacturing, and what the court decided in this case was that the Legislature of West Virginia did not have the power to authorize the city of Parkersburg to issue its bonds for that purpose and, therefore, held the bonds to be void. Among sentences in this case, on which the Attorney General may have relied, are the following on page 501:

Taxation to pay the bonds in question is not taxation for a public object. It is taxation which takes the private property of one person for the private use of another person.

It is difficult to get the bearing of these sentences or of the case as a whole on anything in the McNary-Haugen bill. The bonds in the Parkersburg case were not for a public object. The equalization fee in the McNary-Haugen bill is not a tax. That fee is only imposed on a basic agricultural commodity during an operating period on such commodity. The equalization fee is imposed not to raise money for a public object or for the support of Government or for the discharge of any Government obligation, but that fee is levied in order to support the marketing system which the bill undertakes to set up and is imposed only on so much of any commodity which enters the channels of trade during an operating period. The fee is paid by the persons to be benefited, and in no sense does it constitute the taking of the private property of one person for the private use of another person. In my opinion neither the reasons assigned by the Attorney General nor the court decision cited by him support his third constitutional objection.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. If I have time.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. I want to ask the gentleman's opinion, because I regard him as one of the best lawyers in the House, taking the bill as a whole as it passed the last Congress and vetoed by the President, if it was pending in the Supreme Court on a bill of exceptions urging it was unconstitutional, would there not be sufficient legal doubt in respect of the constitutional question raised, in the gentleman's judgment, to invoke the rule that where there is a doubt about the constitutionality of an act it is resolved in favor of its validity and held to be constitutional?

Mr. RAMSEYER. In my early practice of the law I not infrequently undertook to state what the Supreme Court of the State or of the United States would do under certain circumstances. I did not undertake to say in my statement what the Supreme Court would do, but to give my reaction on the Attorney General's opinion.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. What does the gentleman think, under the question submitted, would be the ruling of the Supreme Court?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman in his question stated correctly the rule the Supreme Court would follow in such a case. The court would find for the constitutionality of the act unless the court should find beyond doubt that the act was unconstitutional. Some courts have stated the rule that an act should not be declared unconstitutional unless the court should so find beyond a reasonable doubt. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has only 11 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much time does the gentleman need?

Mr. BYRNS. About 10 more minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I surrender 10 minutes of my time.

Mr. BYRNS. Then I will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the President of the United States in his message to Congress has again touched upon the subject of agriculture. I take it from his message that his position upon this question has not changed materially from the position he took in the opening session of the last Congress. Now, gentlemen, the President of the United States says that the Congress should have to approach this question—with a sincere and candid consideration of the different measures to be presented to the Committee on Agriculture for the purpose of solving this difficult and most important question.

For my part I have followed the gentlemen who have advocated the Haugen bill, and I have followed the McNary-Haugen bill. But, gentlemen, I want to say to you Members of this House we have not yet been able to get any relief for the farmer. The President of the United States took the responsibility of vetoing the McNary-Haugen bill, and now that question is back here again. For my part, I propose to vote for any reasonable, sound legislation proposed by the committees of this House, but I do not propose to stand up here and vote for bills for political purposes or to badger the President of the United States. We want relief in the farming and agricultural districts of this country, and we want it now. We are not going to be able to wait until you can discuss whether or not you are going to have a bill exactly as it suits you.

I have supported these bills and have supported them conscientiously and sincerely. But I say it is the duty of this House in accordance with the messages of the President of the United States to go to work and help the President work out an agricultural bill here that will do good to the country, and if it is not just what we want, we do not adjourn forever, and we can make the bill work. I am in favor of getting down to the facts and not playing politics with this proposition. [Applause.] I do not think I can be charged with having played politics on this question. It is a most important question to me and to men who come from districts like mine, and it is no satisfaction to the farmer in my district for me to go back and say, "I made a hard fight, I stood up and worked for this bill, or for that, to the last, but I do not bring any results." It is no consolation to the fellow whose home is being sold out under the hammer to be told that I worked for this bill and voted for it when I knew that the President of the United States was not going to approve it.

I want a bill passed here that we can vote for, a bill that will offer some relief to the farmers of this country, a bill that the President is willing to sign. It is of no use to pass a bill here that is going to be vetoed again, and which can not be passed by a two-thirds vote over the President's veto.

The farmers in my district are in a desperate condition, and that condition is not due to law and not due to economic conditions, but it is due to weather conditions and other specific causes. The pest of the boll weevil went into the southeastern portion of Oklahoma and absolutely destroyed the cotton of that part of the country.

In western Oklahoma there is a bountiful growth of cotton, but in south and central and in southeastern Oklahoma there are hundreds upon hundreds of acres where the farmers were not justified in going in with even one cotton sack; acres upon acres will not produce a hundred pounds of seed cotton; lands which under ordinary conditions would produce a bale of cotton to the acre. That is the condition down there. As I say, it is not due to economic conditions or to political conditions, but to the weather and to pests.

I believe that if the President is as sincere as he says he is, and if Congress is as sincere as I know it is, we ought to go to work here and within 60 days give the farmer something that will give him a chance to get out of the terrible situation he is in now. The newspapers in my section can scarcely find enough space to print the foreclosure proceedings that are going on down in the courts there, and I understand that is the situation in other States also. It is a situation that needs the attention of Congress and the conscientious and sincere study of men who will give their best thought to it without any idea of politics, because it is a nonpartisan question. It is a fundamental question which ought to be dealt with by men without regard to politics. I am satisfied that within a few days this Congress could write a bill that would bring some cheer to the despondent agriculturists of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Are we assured that the Democratic candidate, Al Smith, will not have an agricultural-relief plank in his platform?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say that I hope he will not need to have an agricultural-relief plank in his platform, and I hope this matter will be settled before the assembling of the convention. If we do not settle this farm question here as Democrats and Republicans, it will be doubtful after awhile whether we shall have much to say about it; the people themselves will settle it at the next election. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Tennessee used all his time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has six minutes left.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am 50 years of age to-day. This morning I looked from the window where I room at 411 Fourth Street SE. and for a few minutes reflected on the frailty of man and the shortness of his fleeting hours. His earthly existence is so short, his responsibility is so great, that it must be discharged promptly and in a brief span of years or left undone. I wondered then, and I wonder now, if I and all of us are measuring up to our full responsibility in behalf of the people we represent.

I looked again from the window; to the south I could see Seward Square, named for that splendid statesman. I looked to the north, along Fourth Street, to where the British soldiers marched when the Capitol and White House were burned in the War of 1812. I saw children playing and felt again the burden that all should feel of doing the things which will give the children of the Nation a chance for the fullest development of their higher and better selves. Along this very street Col. Charles A. Lindbergh played as a child, while his father, then Congressman, lived near by. Over this street the same Lindbergh flew as the most beloved hero in all the world only a few short years later. He was the same noble boy both when he played on the street in his early youth and when he flew through the sky above the street, bringing on the wings of the Spirit of St. Louis the justly earned honors of all the peoples of all the earth.

Then I thought again of the children playing on the street, of the little boys and girls of my district and of the Nation, and I wondered how many Lindberghs, Washingtons, and truly great men and women are among them. Then I answered my own question and said—surely they are all great. They are our all in all. They are the boys and girls of to-day and the future preservers and defenders of our Nation, our Christianity, and our every God-given right. Then I said there is but one yardstick by which all of our legislation should be measured, and that is the yardstick of our children's physical, educational, moral, and general welfare.

Oh, that a little child may lead us and that those of us charged with responsibility here would day after day see the hands of untold millions of children held up to us, pleading for better laws, more wholesome and proper enforcement of law, and higher ideals of civic, political, and moral righteousness. I can hear the children now, throughout the length and breadth of our country, pleading for a better chance in all the higher and better spheres of development.

When we think of a change of our Constitution, or statutory law, let us ask whether the interest of the children can be best served by the change. Let us have their welfare at heart, and we will not go wrong.

If Sunday movies, Sunday theaters, Sunday dance halls, Sunday night clubs, Sunday gambling dens, and Sunday desecration generally are helping our boys and girls become nobler men and women, then by all means there should be no law to interfere, but everything possible should be done to encourage and assist these Sunday activities in the Nation's Capital and elsewhere.

If the clear, pure stream of innocent childhood is improved and made better by pouring into it the slush and filth of the movie and theater, the vulgarity of the modern dance, the profanity of the Sunday pool rooms, and the curse of the Sunday night club and gambling den, then those who oppose the Sunday laws are mankind's greatest benefactors and deserve the support of all humanity.

I am an ardent advocate of the "separation of church and State," and the "freedom of religion," but I am frank to confess that, for the very life of me, I can not see how closing Sunday dens and dives of iniquity will bring about the union of church and State, or to the least degree deprive any one of their fullest religious freedom. How can the moral protection by law of our children bring union of church and State, or destroy religious freedom any more than the snatching of our children from a horrible death of their physical bodies would destroy these sacred rights? Ah, Mr. Chairman, my bill to provide Sunday as a day of rest in the Capital of the Nation ought not to be enacted into law if it is not in behalf of the children of the Nation. In fact, there is no law worthy of its place on the statute books which is not in behalf of our children. No book or periodical should have ever been printed which injures the children of the Nation, and no lecture or sermon should have ever been delivered or preached which injures the youth of our land. Mr. Chairman, no sword was ever drawn in behalf of liberty unless it was drawn in behalf of the children, their fathers and mothers, and their homes. So, Mr. Chairman, let us legislate now and in the future in behalf of our children.

I am pleading for farm legislation in behalf of the good fathers and mothers of my district, so they may give to their children the splendid assistance I know they wish for them and which we, as legislators, should gladly bestow. I have made many speeches, introduced many bills in which and by which I am seeking to help the children of my district and the Nation. Legislate for the children and there will be no need to worry about the welfare of the parents. Some may legislate for and serve the corporate interest; but for me, let me serve the children. Give us a land of splendid childhood rather than a nation of politicians and profiteers. Let our motto be—corrupt monopolies and spoilsmen never, restrictions for corporations, equal rights for men and women, and special privileges for children.

May we have farm relief for men, women, and children and not for the exploiter and the profiteer. Let us help the farmer and his family directly, not indirectly; by clear, definite means and not by circuitous, unknown, and unfathomable provisions; through agencies of their friends and not their enemies; by applying the assistance to their own pockets and not through the pockets of others; by helping them make a profit out of their own products and not by setting up an expensive governmental agency to speculate on their products; by making them masters of their own fortune and not by putting their fate in the hands of others; and by making them the masters of the great business of feeding and clothing the world rather than slaves doing the bidding of all others. And let us do all of this for the children and their fathers and mothers of the farm, and the service we render them will inure to the children and the fathers and mothers of our great Nation.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been making some observations and giving you my reflections as I looked from my window this morning. I can not in this short time picture to you all the thoughts in behalf of humanity that then and there came trooping through my mind.

I am 50 years of age and my future service to humanity must necessarily be of short duration. At best life is gone almost before we begin our service to our fellow man—

> Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud,
> Like a swift fleeting meteor, a fast-flying cloud;
> A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
> Man passes from life to his rest in the grave.

But, Mr. Chairman, I looked again from my window to the northward, across the yard of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, where Dr. John Chester, its founder, preached for 30 years, and I saw just beyond the splendid brick home, No. 129 Fourth Street SE., at the northwest corner of B and Fourth Streets SE., the home of the late lamented Senator Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, while he was first serving in the United States Congress several years ago. Then I thought of his most excellent service to humanity and his wonderful contributions to the literary world, and I came to my office and read and reread his beautiful essay "At fifty." The author evidently wrote this from some point on the east coast of Florida, but it could easily have been inspired at any point on the Georgia or Florida coast, with such an author as Watson "At fifty." Let me read some extracts from this inimitable classic:

> A narrow spur of land, stretching out from inlet to inlet, forming a ribbonlike island, closed in upon the east by the Atlantic and on the west by the streams that drain the Everglades—such is the place. Ages and ages ago the wash of the ocean, met by the wash of the rivers, banked up a ridge of sand; and upon this sand nature, in the long run of the years, planted a jungle; and in the tangled mazes of the jungle the deer tramped a trail, the wildcat found a lair, the raccoon made a home, the cougar crouched for squirrels, and the rattlesnakes multiplied. Water fowl of all kinds whirled and screamed as they flew from feeding ground to roosting place; and the redbird, the wren, and the mocker were never more plentiful or musical than here.
> The ships in stately procession pass down from north to south; over yonder on the distant horizon you can see the smoke, or the masts, of those that follow the Gulf Stream from the south to the north. Here, on the one hand, is the great world and the ocean; on the other, the inland route—by lake and sound and river—where traffic flows in safer ways and no storm besets the sailor.
> Sit here on the wall of the boathouse and gaze southward. A lovelier stretch of water the world does not hold—for the tide is still on and everything is water. A fringe of forest bounding the view southward, a thread of brilliant blue marking the spear thrust which the ocean makes into the brown bosom of the river, the tossing foam which shows where the billows from the sea charge home upon the distant beach; and, over all, the mellow radiance of the sunny afternoon—for the tide is ebbing now, and the sun is going down.
> All that the ocean could do at this time has been done—forevermore. The outgoing currents drove back the lake and the river, mounting over them both, marching mile after mile landward, conquering mile after mile of reluctant ground—but the invader could go so far and no farther, and he is now sullenly drawing back into the sea.
> Great monsters of the deep followed the invading waters as they rolled toward the Everglades, and many a tragedy that was veiled by the water would make you shudder at its story, if the victim could speak of its cruel fate; but the monsters are drifting seaward now and their battle of life moves to another field.
> If you glance over the island you will see that the air is white with butterflies. There are countless thousands of them. They do not fly from flower to flower, some one way and some another, hovering aimlessly or lighting idly here and there, as we dwellers of the upcountry have been accustomed to see them do. These butterflies are drifting all in one direction; these butterflies have no mind to stop; these butterflies neither linger nor hover nor dwadle; these butterflies go drifting from north to south, as though they had been called by some mysterious voice, were fastened to some mysterious purpose, and were the helpless instruments of some mysterious fate.

All day long they have been flying by, over the jungle, over the beach, over the lake, over the sound, over the river, obeying some unheard order, following some unseen leader, answering some unfathomable design.

I wonder what it will all be like when the last tide has rolled backward to the sea, and its monsters come forth no more—for I am 50 years old, and it is the time of the ebbing tide and the declining sun with me.

I wonder whether those creations of the mind, which some of us have thought important, are, after all, as aimless and as fragile and as ephemeral as these butterflies which go streaming past, leaving no trace on earth or sea or sky—for I am 50, and I should like to know whether all this effort of heart and mind leaves the world brighter and better, or whether we are just so many butterflies which yesterday did not know, and to-morrow will forget.

* * * * * * *

Who would be a drone in the hive? Who would be a deserter from the fight? Shall trumpets call strong men to the fields of human effort, and I play dastard? Shall flags float by, with brave soldiers marching forth to the service of duty, and I play the coward?

Never, by the splendor of God!

Better the march and the struggle, and the heartbreak of failure than the selfish refusal to try! Better the battle, the failure, than the selfish refusal to try! Better the battle, the good fight and the defeat, than the craven lurking in the rear.

* * * * * * *

Give me the man who will live and die for his ideals, who will surrender no righteous position without a struggle, who will perish rather than pollute his soul by apostasy from right!

Better—a thousand times better—the tempest and the shipwreck with such a creed than inglorious decay at the wharf, with any other. Better a Waterloo and a glorious death in the squares of the Old Guard than worldly pensions and honors for base betrayal of cause and country.

So I thought at 20. So I think at 50. I have the scars to show for it. And, like any other soldier of the wars, I am proud of them.

Let the tide ebb—it must be so; let the daylight fade, it must be so—but this much any poor mortal can do, and should do: Hold aloft, to the very last, the banner of your creed; fight for it as long as you can stand; and when you go down, let it be possible for you to say to those who love you, "Lay a sword on my coffin, for I also was a soldier in the great struggle for humanity."

Let me say, we should study every legislative proposal from the standpoint of the children, their parents, and their homes. Bring on your farm relief bills and I will decide whether I will support them or not as soon as I determine whether or not they are helpful, directly, to the individual farmer and his family.

Your Muscle Shoals proposals are all camouflage and smoke screen except in so far as they provide now and hereafter for the fullest protection of the ultimate consumer of the power of that great plant, whether it be in the form of fertilizer or electrical energy. Show me wherein the legislative plan is for the benefit of the individual citizen—the farmer and his wife and children, if you please—if you desire my support of the proposition. We must, here and now, protect the rights of our children and generations yet unborn, in the great God-given heritage at Muscle Shoals or by our votes sanction and approve the fleecing of the public—within the law—long after we are gone. God forbid that we should discharge so criminally, so sacred a trust.

We can not afford to become disheartened to the extent of ceasing our fight because of the opposition we encounter, but rather we should surge onward with, ever and ever, more determination.

My people have done more for me than I have ever been able to do for them. In our fight here for the farmer, the laboring man, and the common people we are met by the strongest opposition from every direction and at all times. We can not afford to lessen our efforts but must gird ourselves for a more militant conflict.

We have been able to pass hundreds of small bills for the farmers, for instance, but we have never passed for them a real piece of constructive legislation, such as has been passed for the railroads, the banks, the manufacturing corporations, the shipping interests, and others.

We must admit that they are not getting a square deal. All others fleece them. They, in the long run, pay all the taxes, for all taxes are passed on to the ultimate consumer and eventually to the farmers. Bills are drawn to relieve the taxes of the more wealthy but not of the farmer.

Some say there is no way to help the farmer. This is a false theory. I know definitely where the trouble is and know how it can be remedied. The trouble is the farmers do not have enough friends in Congress. Too many draw bills to help others help the farmers, and the farmers never get the help, or if they get it they pay too much for the service. Let us help them directly. Let us help their children and their folks.

During my service here I have introduced scores of bills and engaged in thousands of contests, but I have found only one true yardstick for the measurement of proposals, and that is the yardstick of the children's interest and welfare. All else is treacherous and sinking sand.

Let us quit playing politics, dodging adverse newspaper publicity, pleading sectionalism, representing the corporations, making money and property the criterion and legislate for folks, for fathers and mothers, and for their children.

If we would serve all that is highest and best we must serve the children. If we would legislate for our communities we must legislate for the children. If we would help our districts and States we must help the children. If we would preserve the Nation we must preserve our children.

If we would strengthen and make imperishable our great Government we must preserve our children and make stronger at every opportunity the laws for their physical and moral welfare and growth.

If we would serve all mankind we must serve the children, and by so doing we will serve Him who said:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto Me.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this morning, when we entered upon the discussion of the bill, I suggested we would like to fix the time at three hours and that when we began the reading of the bill I would ask for a little more time. I have only five minutes remaining, but I will probably want to ask a little extra time.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to suggest that the time was fixed in the House. The Chair would suggest that the first section of the bill be read and then the gentleman can get whatever time is necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. All right, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes, namely:

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 minutes. I may not use that much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the urgent character of the preparation and consideration of this bill is due to the failure of the second deficiency bill and the public buildings appropriation bill during the last session of Congress. The failure of these bills resulted in embarrassment to the business of the Government and to those charged with its administration. The failure has resulted in postponements, stoppages, and great inconvenience in all quarters where funds for the conduct of the Government were short. Many of the most serious situations have been temporarily cared for by exigency measures, which is not good practice.

By the time this bill can become a law, 10 months will have elapsed since the failure of the two bills to which I have called your attention. This passage of time has resulted in many changes in the status of items in those bills. Many are no longer needed at all. Many are needed in decreased amounts and a few are needed in increased amounts. A number have been transferred to the 1929 Budget and will be found there in substantially the same form as in the bills that failed. Many entirely new items, which have arisen since Congress adjourned, are presented for the first time in the bill that is before you.

The estimates submitted for this bill aggregate $205,538,858.02. The bill carries, in the recommendation of the committee, $198,916,264.91, or $6,622,593.11 less than the Budget recommendations.

Several large items make up the total of the bill. We carry for the refund of taxes paid in excess of the amount due $43,000,000.

The Treasury Department has on hand unexpended about $53,000,0000 for this purpose, and this $43,000,000 added will make $96,000,000 with which they will be able to meet the obligations on refund claims between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. How much longer will we have to pay those refunds?

Mr. MADDEN. You will be paying them as long as you are paying taxes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. There is no way of correcting it?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no way on earth to stop you from paying more than you ought to if you make a schedule indicating that you owe more than you do owe. When the audit occurs and they find out you have paid them too much they pay you the money back. It all depends on you and on me. A large part of these refunds is also due to court decisions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And sometimes you must pay more in order to avoid penalties pending adjustment?
